A Personal Message to the Reader

I would like to thank you for taking the time to join me on this journey. A journey into "the illusions", that surround us every day. Do you sometimes feel lost? Do you sometimes feel alone and as though you don't belong? Are you in search of spiritual growth?

We live in a technological world, where past truths that make up our perception of the world and our place in it, are based on the things we learn as a child, from our parents and others in our lives, from our educational system, and in general our environment and the experiences we gain in that environment. All of which, may not be appropriate, distorted, abusive, and even controlling. Even with the best intentions, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." We must understand, we only have the information and knowledge that we have been allowed to know. That knowledge has been controlled by the 1% in power. The 1% that we feel control our very existence. Not race, for the 1% comprises of all nationalities, the other 99% are us, the poor, the disenfranchised, the lonely and the alone.

I use images, articles, song lyrics to make an impact on you. We all love some form of music, for music is one of the universal languages, however, when is the last time you "read the words" of a song?

Take for example, 'We Are The World' written in 1985, 36 years later, how much has changed? I ask you have we transcended our minds as a people?

We Are The World

"There comes a time
When we heed a certain call When the world must come together as one There are people dying Oh, and it's time to lend a hand to life The greatest gift of all We can't go on Pretending day-by-day
That someone, somewhere soon make a change We're all a part of God's great big family
And the truth, you know, love is all we need"

Brainwashing (also known as mind control, menticide, coercive per-suasion, thought control, thought reform, and re-education) is the concept that the human mind can be altered or controlled by certain psy-chological techniques. Brainwashing is said to reduce its subjects' ability to think critically or independently, to allow the introduction of new, un-wanted thoughts and ideas into their minds,^[1] as well as to change their attitudes, values and beliefs.^{[2][3]}

The term “brainwashing” was first used in English by Edward Hunt-er in 1950 to describe how the Chinese government appeared to make peo-ple cooperate with them. Research into the concept also looked at Nazi Germany, at some criminal cases in the United States, and at the actions of human traffickers. In the late 1960s and 1970s, there was considerable sci-entific and legal debate, as well as media attention, about the possibility of brainwashing being a factor when Lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) was used^[4] or in the conversion of young people to some new religious move-ments, which were often referred to as cults at the time.^{[5][6]} The concept of brainwashing is sometimes involved in lawsuits, especially regarding child custody. It can also be a theme in science fiction and in political and corpo-rate culture, but is not generally accepted as a scientific term.^{[7][8]}

Our society uses various levels of pressure and force, truthfully, physical and mental punishment are used every day. But we only associate brainwashing on the level of cultism.

late 15th century (as a verb): from Latin occultare 'secrete', frequentative of occulere 'conceal', based on celare 'to hide'; the adjective and noun from occult- 'covered over', from the verb occulere.

For other uses, see Cult (disambiguation).

Further information: Cult (religious practice) and Sociological classifications of religious movements

In modern English, a cult is a social group that is defined by its unusual religious, spiritual, or philosophical beliefs, or its common interest in a particular personality, object, or goal. This sense of the term is controversial, having divergent definitions both in popular culture and academia, and has also been an ongoing source of contention among scholars across several fields of study.^{[1][2]:348–56} The word "cult" is usually considered pejorative.

An older sense of the word cult involves a set of religious devotional practices that are conventional within their culture, are related to a particular figure, and are often associated with a particular place.^[3] References to the "cult" of a particular Catholic saint, or the imperial cult of ancient Rome, for example, use this sense of the word.

While the literal and original sense of the word remains in use in the English language, a derived sense of "excessive devotion" arose in the 19th century.^[1] Beginning in the 1930s, cults became the object of sociological study in the context of the study of religious behavior.^[4] Since the 1940s the Christian counter cult movement has opposed some sects and new religious movements, labeling them “cults” because of their unorthodox beliefs. Since the 1970s, the secular anti-cult movement has opposed certain groups, and in reaction to acts of violence which have been committed by some of their members, it has frequently charged them with practicing mind control. Scholars and the media have disputed some of the claims and actions of anti-cult movements, leading to further public controversy.

Sociological classifications of religious movements may identify a cult as a social group with socially deviant or novel beliefs and practices,^[5] although this is often unclear.^{[6][7][8]} Other researchers present a less-organized picture of cults, saying that they arise spontaneously around novel beliefs and practices.^[9] Groups labelled as “cults” range in size from local groups with a few followers to international organizations with millions of adherents.^[10]

How shall we define occultism?

Occultism is not a homogenous movement and is widely diverse. Over the course of its history, the term occultism has been used in various different ways. However, in contemporary

The occult, in the broadest sense, is a category of esoteric supernatural beliefs and practices which generally fall outside the scope of religion and science, encompassing such phenomena involving otherworldly agency as mysticism, spirituality, and magic. It can also refer to supernatural ideas like extra-sensory perception and parapsychology.

The term occult sciences was used in 16th-century Europe to refer to astrology, alchemy, and natural magic, which today are considered pseudo-sciences. The term occultism emerged in 19th-century France,^[1] where it came to be associated with various French esoteric groups connected to Éliphas Lévi and Papus, and in 1875 was introduced into the English language by the esotericist Helena Blavatsky.

Throughout the 20th century, the term was used idiosyncratically by a range of different authors, but by the 21st century was commonly employed—including by academic scholars of esotericism—to refer to a range of esoteric currents that developed in the mid-19th century and their descendants. Occultism is thus often used to categorize such esoteric traditions as Spiritualism, Theosophy, Anthroposophy, the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and New Age.

Use of the term as a nominalized adjective has developed especially since the late twentieth century. In that same period, occult and culture were combined to form the neologism occulture.

dog ma | \ 'dòg-mə , 'däg- \

plural dogmas also dogmata \ 'dòg-mə-tə , 'däg- \

Definition of dogma

1a: something held as an established opinion especially a definite authori-tative tenet

b: a code of such tenets pedagogical dogma

c: a point of view or tenet put forth as authoritative without adequate grounds

2: a doctrine or body of doctrines concerning faith or morals formally stated and authoritatively proclaimed by a church

Synonyms

- canon,
- doctrine

Dogma

Is a belief or set of beliefs that is accepted by the members of a group without being questioned or doubted.^[1] It may be in the form of an official system of principles or doctrines of a religion, such as Roman Catholicism, Judaism, or Protestantism,^[2] as well as the positions of a philosopher or of a philosophical school such as postmodernism, egalitarianism, and dark enlightenment. It may also be found in political belief-systems, such as communism,^[3] progressivism, liberalism, conser-vatism, and fascism.^{[4][5][6][7]}

In the pejorative sense, dogma refers to enforced decisions, such as those of aggressive political interests or authorities.^{[8][9]} More generally, it is applied to some strong belief which its adherents are not willing to discuss rationally. This attitude is named as a dogmatic one, or as dogmatism; and is often used to refer to matters related to religion, but is not limited to theistic attitudes alone and is often used with respect to political or philo-sophical dogmas (https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/)

This article is about evolution in biology. For related articles, see Outline of evolution. For other uses, see Evolution (disambiguation).

For a more accessible and less technical introduction to this topic, see Introduction to evolution.

Evolution occurs when evolutionary processes such as natural selection (including sexual selection) and genetic drift act on this variation, resulting in certain characteristics becoming more common or rare within a population.^[4] The evolutionary pressures that determine whether a characteristic should be common or rare within a population constantly change, resulting in the change in heritable characteristics arising over successive generations. It is this process of evolution that has given rise to biodiversity at every level of biological organization, including the levels of species, individual organisms and molecules.^{[5][6]}

The scientific theory of evolution by natural selection was conceived independently by Charles Darwin and Alfred Russel Wallace in the mid-19th century and was set out in detail in Darwin's book On the Origin of Species.^[7] Evolution by natural selection was first demonstrated by the observation that more offspring are often produced than can possibly survive. This is followed by three observable facts about living organisms:

(1) traits vary among individuals with respect to their morphology, physiology and behavior (phenotypic variation), (2) different traits confer different rates of survival and reproduction (differential fitness) and (3) traits can be passed from generation to generation (heritability of fitness).

^[8] Thus, in successive generations members of a population are more likely to be replaced by the progenies of parents with favorable characteristics that have enabled them to survive and reproduce in their respective environments. In the early 20th century, other competing ideas of evolution such as mutationism and orthogenesis were refuted as the modern synthesis reconciled Darwinian evolution with classical genetics, which established adaptive evolution as being caused by natural selection acting on Mendelian genetic variation.^[9]

All life on Earth shares a last universal common ancestor (LUCA)^{[10][11][12]} that lived approximately 3.5–3.8 billion years ago.^[13] The fossil record includes a progression from early biogenic graphite,^[14] to microbial mat fossils,^[15] ^{[16][17]} to fossilised multicellular organisms. Existing patterns of biodiversity have been shaped by repeated formations of new species (speciation), changes within species (anagenesis) and loss of species (extinction) throughout the evolutionary history of life on Earth.^[18] Morphological and biochemical traits are more similar among species that share a more recent common ancestor, and can be used to reconstruct phylogenetic trees.^{[19][20]}

Evolutionary biologists have continued to study various aspects of evolution by forming and testing hypotheses as well as constructing theories based on evidence from the field or laboratory and on data generated by the methods of mathematical and theoretical biology. Their discoveries have influenced not just the development of biology but numerous other scientific and industrial fields, including agriculture, medicine and computer science.^[21]

What is evolution?

(<https://www.yourgenome.org/sites/default/files/styles/banner/public/banners/facts/what-is-evolution/evolution-01.jpg?itok=BrMgZFuz>)

yourgenome.org/sites/default/files/styles/banner/public/banners/facts/what-is-evolution/evolution-01.jpg?itok=BrMgZFuz

In biology, evolution is the change in the characteristics of a species over several generations and relies on the process of natural selection.

- The theory of evolution is based on the idea that all species' are related and gradually change over time.
- Evolution relies on there being genetic variation' in a population which affects the physical characteristics (phenotype) of an organism.
- Some of these characteristics may give the individual an advantage over other individuals which they can then pass on to their offspring.

What is natural selection?

- Charles Darwin's theory of evolution states that evolution happens by natural selection.
- Individuals in a species show variation in physical characteristics. This variation is because of differences in their genes?
- Individuals with characteristics best suited to their environment are more likely to survive, finding food, avoiding predators and resisting disease. These individuals are more likely to reproduce and pass their genes on to their children.
- Individuals that are poorly adapted to their environment are less likely to survive and reproduce. Therefore their genes are less likely to be passed on to the next generation.
- As a consequence those individuals most suited to their environment survive and, given enough time, the species will gradually evolve.

Natural selection in action: the Peppered moth

- Before the industrial revolution in the mid-1700s, the peppered moth was most commonly a pale whitish color with black spots.
- This coloring enabled them to hide from potential predators on trees with pale-colored bark, such as birch trees.
- The rarer dark-colored peppered moths were easily seen against the pale bark of trees and therefore more easily seen by predators.

- As the Industrial Revolution reached its peak, the air in industrial areas became full of soot. This stained trees and buildings black.
- As a result, the lighter moths became much easier to spot than the darker ones, making them vulnerable to being eaten by birds.
- The darker moths were now camouflaged against the soot-stained trees and therefore less likely to be eaten.
- Over time this change in the environment led to the darker moths becoming more common and the pale moths rarer.

What have genes got to do with it?

- The mechanisms of evolution operate at the genomic level. Changes in DNA[?] sequences affect the composition and expres-sion[?] of our genes, the basic units of inheritance[?].
- To understand how different species have evolved we have to look at the DNA sequences in their genomes.
- Our evolutionary history is written into our genome. The human genome looks the way it does because of all the genetic changes that affected our ancestors.
- When DNA and genes in different species look very similar, this is usually taken as evidence of them sharing ancestors.
- For example, humans and the fruit fly, Drosophila melanogaster, share much of their DNA. 75 per cent of genes

- DNA accumulates changes over time. Some of these changes can be beneficial, and provide a selective advantage for an organism.
- Other changes may be harmful if they affect an important, every-day function. As a result some genes do not change much. They are said to be conserved.

Different types of evolution

Convergent evolution

- When the same adaptations evolve independently, under similar selection pressures.
- For example, flying insects, birds and bats have all evolved the ability to fly, but independently of each other.

Co-evolution

- When two species or groups of species have evolved alongside each other where one adapts to changes in the other.
- For example, flowering plants and pollinating insects such as bees.

Adaptive radiation

- When a species splits into a number of new forms when a change in the environment makes new resources available or creates new environmental challenges.
- For example, finches on the Galapagos Islands have developed different shaped beaks to take advantage of the different kinds of food available

Sketches of the heads of finches from the Galapagos Islands showing the differences in their beak shapes due to evolution.

Preface

I would like to begin our first encounter, if you would be so kind, by introducing myself, my name is VaShawn F. Head. I am not religious; "I am what I am and that's all that I am." (Popeye the sailorman)

There's nothing in this book you don't already know. With so much information around us it's hard to PROCESS. It has taken 55 years to process the experiences in my life up to this point.

19 years ago, or so, I was at an exceptionally low point in my marriage. 1 of my wives, SaLisa, came across a relationship site, Tickle.com. They were popular back then, when the internet was still predominately, about the exchange of information. not production, manufacturing, sales, and purchase. Anyway, although it was a 'dating: are you compatible site', I investigated further and found it was legitimately BACKED BY, Psychiatry professionals, and was certified. (Do you remember when certification took over having a degree in some fields?)

(*Red marks are opportunities to express thoughts along the journey we will share, starting with maybe your name, in your personal log. Write questions, log experiences; I hope to one day meet you.)

I went ahead and paid my $125.00 and gained access to taking, every psychiatric test they had; AND the professionals would analyze your test, and you would get the results.

The 3 of us took the tests to determine compatibility, I chose to take them all. Needless to say we were compatible, because some 22 and 36 years; respectively; later, we are even now in sync.

Because of that self-analyzation and reflection over my life, I have been blessed, in my humble opinion, to have pinpointed and completed 1 thought in my life, and that has taken over sixteen years. Yes, you read correctly.

If I am blessed to touch one person, and they find some association with my experiences in my life and the conclusions that I've made from analyzing those experiences, then I will have been successful in full filling what I believe to be my 1%.

In my humble opinion, I am not a very smart man, I don't have any degrees, I did graduate high school, Cleveland Heights High in Cleveland Ohio and I have technical training in computers. No impressive letters behind my name.

I need you to understand, if you would be so kind, all the information in this book, I have been blessed to come up with a conclusion, that best suits my processing of my life, and this book, for lack of a better term chronicles a small portion of that information, the information that opened the mind's eye. Or as my daughter would have me say in movie talk, "The sleeper has awakened father." From the movie Dune. (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hzUIX-EyvJeA>) (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8g18jFHCLXk>)

This focus; led me to these opinions, that I feel at peace within my own individuality, and co-existence with my fellow human beings. We no longer talk to each other; we talk at each other. If you understand English and its origins, you will understand why I choose to call English; the language of, "The Fall of Babylon". (How do you feel about communication with the people in your life? Spouse, child, parent, co-workers, etc...)

Why people do not listen

Techniques > Listening > Why people do not listen.

I'd rather talk | I'm distracted | It's not interesting | I'm busy talking | One of the reasons people are not good at listening is because they do not lis-ten. Listening skills start with paying attention. If you know why your mind is tending not to listen, then you have taken the first step in addressing this.

I'd rather talk

Talking can seem far more useful and attractive than listening, and so people will seek to talk rather than listen.

Needs

Talking seems to better address more needs than listening. When I talk, I am in control, and can steer the conversation any way that I choose. When I talk I am also the center of attention, which boosts my sense of identity.

Goals

When I am talking, then I have a better opportunity to achieve my goals, for example by telling other people to do things that I need them to do. I can keep the conversation on my own agenda and prevent others from talking about things that are of no interest to me.

I'm distracted

Busy thinking

We talk at 200–250 wpm (words per minute) but can listen at 300–500 wpm. Thus, when the other person is talking, we get side-tracked by our own thoughts (which may well be triggered by one thing that the speaker says). When we come back into the room, we find that we have lost track of the conversation. Rather than lose face and become embarrassed by this, we nod, smile and hope nobody will notice.

Busy waiting

When we have decided that we want to respond to the speaker, we then stop listening for two reasons. To avoid forgetting what we are going to say, we need to keep rehearsing our thoughts and words and so get lost inside our own heads. We also stay inside as we think about better ways to put our case. When we are paying attention to the speaker, we are not listening to what they say but listening for a space in which we can interject with our reply.

It's not interesting

Speakers are responsible for their listeners every bit as much as the listeners are responsible for listening. The speaker can thus do their bit to stop other people listening to them, including:

- Using boring and uninteresting language
- Using complex and difficult language
- Using a flat speaking tone
- Not using supporting body language
- Not paying attention to the listeners
- Insulting the listeners (perhaps accidentally)
- Talking about things that are not of interest to the listener
- Talking for too long
- Not giving the listener the opportunity to reply

This does not excuse the listener, although it may make their job harder. If you are a speaker, one of your first jobs is to try to help the other person keep listening.

I'm busy talking

People who are talking usually have attention on themselves and what they are saying. With this self-focus, they do not notice that other people are waiting to speak or want to comment about what the speaker has said. Even if they do notice, many people will continue to talk, either to retain control or to fulfill their need for completion (even if nobody is listening!)

STOP-LOOK-LISTEN-THINK-SPEAK

- Stop and actually clear your mind and focus on the person in front of you.
- Look at the person in front of you, make eye contact.
- Listen to the person talking to you, and don't allow yourself to react to just one word.
- Think clearly of what was said to you and how you would react to what you are about to respond to.
- Speak, only if truly necessary. Don't respond because you think you have to. Often times you will find there really isn't anything that needs to be said.

My family and I started, "Let me know when you are done, I don't want to interrupt you." To curve the above points. Now this only works if you have established that you want to listen, so don't rush. But it only works if the other person recognizes the gesture and has common sense (which by the way is no longer common) and will let you into the conversation. (Here's an idea. Sit down with a group of friends or that special someone and share this infor-mation. Then you agree to have a conversation with this practice. When the person is finished, they say "Done". If by chance there is a need for a subtle hint that they are being 'Long Winded', politely repeat, "Let me know when you are done." Now remember you must give them a reasonable amount of time, or better still agree beforehand how much time each should have.

But before we begin?

- What is the difference between a fool and a wise man? A fool thinks he knows everything. A wise man knows he knows nothing at all.

In my humble opinion, English is a grouping of words collected and compared to be similar from around the world. Find this out for yourself simply pick 1 word. Backtrack that word in the dictionary. Let's for argument sake pick a word like terrorist. Look it up in a dictionary of convenience right now. (Did you go to your smart phone?) Then if possible, at your convenience, hold on to this one thought. When you can find a dictionary from oh let's say the year 2002. Then at your earliest convenience, follow that word and find a dictionary of 1987 and so on. Pay attention to the progression of changes of the meanings the further you go back until you cannot go any further. You will have completed one thought and when I did it that was the beginning.

Better still, I made this suggestion to a high school student who was a friend on Xbox360. He asked for guidance on a debate he had chosen to discuss on Privacy vs. Security.

thought already. 9/11 was an event that made

Terrorism. It is a word that is used to intimidate Americans and make them cower in fear. The thought of having people that would purposely try to kill not only Americans, but anyone who stands in their way is quite frightening. There are many ways to define terrorism.

—In 1937, terrorism was defined by the League of Nations convention language: “All criminal acts directed against a State and intended or calculated to create a state of terror in the minds of persons or a group of persons or the general public.”

—In 1987 terrorism was defined as: “Terrorism is an act carried out to achieve an inhuman and corrupt objective and involving [a] threat to security of any kind, and violation of rights acknowledged by religion and mankind.

—Finally, in 2002, after 9/11 terrorism is defined as: “given their nature or context, [acts which] may seriously damage a country or an international organization were committed with the aim of seriously intimidating a population.”

We currently live in a generation where terrorism is a major concern on everyone's mind due to the events of 9/11. That day changed the world as we know it forever. However, it may have changed the world to a greater extent than you may have people question their homeland security and question the people around them as well. Everyone was in shock that an event like this could have happened in the United States of America, the most powerful country in the world. It made people think about whether or not they had enough security. President Bush, in response to the events of 9/11, passed the Pa-triots Act on October 26, 2001.

The Patriots Act, as defined by (www.legalzoom.com) is an acronym for “Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism.” It sounds great on paper; however, I am going to give you a rundown of what it really is and why the Patriot Act is Unconstitutional and why Americans like you and I should take offence to it.

The Patriot Act is a 300-page document with big words that is very hard to interpret. The real meaning of why it is important is because we live in a world where technology is a major role in everyone’s lives, young and old.

The Patriots Act, however, allows for Federal Law Enforcement to in-vade the technology of its citizens in the hopes of intercepting terrorism. This means that they can tap cellphones and listen on phone calls, they can look at every person you have called or had contact with, your financial records and to sum it all up to keep from making a long list that could go on, it allows the Federal Law Enforcement to invade your PRIVACY. It is basically like having a person take your electronic devices and go through everything on it to try to see if you are hiding anything. Now, maybe you are o.k. with this. You might think that it is ok for these people to do this because you have nothing to hide and it is in the name of national security, correct? That, however, is not the point. In the constitution, it states under the Fourth Amendment that:

Pe right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effect against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall be issued, but upon probable cause as stated in the United States Constitution. Which means that the government is not allowed to look at your personal information, even for the purposes of dis-rupting terrorism, without having probable cause, going into a court, and obtaining a warrant. No big deal, right?

Think again. Our government has the information on nearly everyone's phone information and every call that you have made, every text, contact, your financial records, personal records, are all being stored in a database without your consent. For example, and Verizon customers you are going to be upset, a recent article by Pe Washington Post stated that the NSA (National Security Agency) released Metadata, or the information of 102 million people by www.verizon.com of Verizon customers Metadata of the calls, contacts, text messages, and personal information to the National Security Agency. 102 Million people, and are you expecting me to believe that every one of those people is a suspected terrorist? That the NSA has probable cause on each one of those 102 million people? Do you think it is right that they can seize YOUR private information without your consent?

The NSA tried to ward off the issue, and General Mike Hayden, For-mer Director, Central Intelligence Agency at CPAC 2015 Privacy vs Security Debate on YouTube stat-ed himself that "Yes, we do keep Metadata of Millions of American Citi-zens in NSA Databases however, we do not review the information under very strict circumstances." Well, there are two problems with that. The first problem is that doesn't excuse the fact that you are gathering innocent in-formation on American civilians without a search warrant violating our first Amendment freedom of speech, and expression, towards the government and our fourth amendment of, no unnecessary search and seizures without a warrant, issued by the judge, and in this case, there never was one given for each one of those Verizon customers. That same comparison is like go-ing into public with an illegal concealed Firearm but not opening fire in public. Moving on.

Point #2 I would like to point out of why this is wrong, is because they are lying to you. They access the information even though they say they only access it under very strict circumstances, as stated once again from Pe Washington Post from an NSA Audit identifies 2776 incidents, or violations of the rules of court orders, for Surveillance of Americans or foreign targets in the United States, from April 2011 through March 2012. This means that those strict circumstances that General Hayden was talking about aren't really in effect.

Our information is priceless and although, for the benefits of prevent-ing terrorism, the Patriot Act has invaded the privacy of its Citizens for the illusion of security, violates the constitution, and shows why you shouldn't sacrifice privacy for security as your privacy can, and will be abused and if that is the case, is there really any security that exists. It also raises the ques-tion; how much power does the Government have? If we stand by this and allow this to happen, what other constitutional rights and basic rights are we going to relinquish. We, the people of the United States hold the power over our Government, not the other way around. The people that state that Na-tional Security is more important than privacy, I give you this. Yes, National security is extremely important now more than ever. However, it does not mean that you should have to relinquish your Privacy for security. It is our governments job to protect us from threats, the police's job to handle these threats, and the Citizens of the United States to report threats. From PGPF.org the United States spends $610 billion from taxpayers on our National Defense. That is just a number mind you, so let me put it into perspective. That is more money than the cost of defense for: "China, Russia, Saudi Arabia, France, United Kingdom, India, and Germany COMBINED!

This money is used to keep our Nation secure and yet, the American people have to relinquish their privacy in order for terrorist attacks not to happen? People that support National Defense also state that we would be able to stop terrorist threats by gathering American information. However, as stated by Judge Andrew Napolitano, Senior Judicial Analyst, during CPAC 2015-

Privacy vs.. Security states that the number of terrorist threats stopped since the Patriot act was signed was 54. However, the next day General Alexander the head of the NSA surveillance program, wrote to amend this the next day, stating that this number wasn't 54 it was 3, and when asked to identify the cases, the general declined. Honestly, terrorists would not state, over a phone, to "DETONATE THE BOMB!" they usually have human carriers who transport the information of device or at the very least speak in code. I would also like to say that there are at least 12 terrorist threats, that were able to pass through the system, like the Boston Bombing, Copenhagen Bombers, Revolution in Yemen, Ukraine Revolution, and the Sandy Hook School Shooting. These events were not stopped, and others were not as well.

So, what do we do? Well, in order to provide a solution, I state that to stop terrorism we must be active community members and report suspicious activity for Police to handle. However, our Government should not have the ability to take personal information from their citizens, and to make unreasonable suspicion. To conclude, I hope that today I was able to make my case, that privacy should never be sacrificed for security and that the Government, if given privacy, has shown to abuse this power. I leave with a final quote from Thomas Jefferson: “Those that sacrifice pri-vacy (liberty) for security will soon realize they will end up, and deserve, neither” — Thomas Jefferson

I would like to thank you all for reading or listening. I hope that you agree with me that Privacy is more important than security. If, however I did not persuade you and you still hold National Security over privacy that is fine. I ask that if you select this option, that you take a pledge to yourself, to be an active community member and report suspicious or dangerous activities to law enforcement. This way, we are able to keep the world, The United States, safe without having to surrender our privacy. We were able to live without the Patriot Act for over 200 years, we can live without it for another 200 as well.

Thank you.

Chapter 1

I would like to take this opportunity, to apologize ahead of time for the repetition of the words, 'in my opinion'. But on the novel side, it establishes that this is only my point of view, or the way that I see it, or process it, my perception. So, let's start a practice right off and "agree to disagree."

This is a practice I feel we would all do better to adopt. (What do you think about this concept of "Agreeing to Disagree"?) James 4:1 'What causes quarrels and what causes fights among you? Is it not this, that your passions are at war within you?'

For me, on this journey to write this book I read, in its entirety, documents, interesting point of views, and the true meaning and power of words. I learned the true meaning of "You are responsible for your thoughts your actions and your words", as is written in the Holy Bible King James version.

If you would like to take a brief glimpse into the power and or chaos of words, choose a word, go to a dictionary, and see how many synonyms exist for that word. Chances are that word will have several choices, alternate words to be used in your word's place. However, if you look at it from a different point of view, those several choices are several chances someone has of misinterpreting that one word you just used.

This is why, in this book I have made my own Comparison Glossary. If you are anything like me, reading Declaration of Independence, The United States Constitution, The Bill of Rights, and every word in my comparison Glossary, comparing almost three hundred years of our language's de-evolution, from three different dictionaries; is extremely tedious at best. But the insight that I gained is a huge part of the foundation we must build together to understand the illusions, secrets, or in my humble opinion, the clarity of our universe, Dare I say our existence.

It is okay not to understand every word, I know I did not. But what hopefully, you will take from this experience is having it in front of you and reading it for yourself. For you to understand the secrets, you must first take it upon yourself to see, read, and experience, things for yourself. As someone once pointed out, being a patriot does not mean you should not be skeptical of your government. Indeed, a true patriot insists on knowing what the people that are running the show are actually doing.

(Before you start to read each document, write down what you believe you already know. After you have read them for yourself compare fact from conjecture.)

Pe 1% with money count on the Fact Pat:

- Most of us are desensitized to the point of numbness and don't want to be hassled.
- Our lives are so stressful we have no time for anything else.
- If you find the time you are not going to spend it reading facts.
- The majority are mere puppets, dare I say 'sheep' and will do as told.
- The minority bicker over words, and principles, and beliefs; that we gave them mind you, and can never unify under one banner.

ONE MESSAGE, ONE PEOPLE, ONE MIND

Please let me take a moment, to clarify something. I do not think that we can achieve all thinking the same way. On the contrary. It is our own individual thinking, and individuality that is the gift from the higher power. Whatever you believe that to be. But we must come to a consensus. If you believe in a higher pow-er, be it called God, Allah, Buddha, or any of the other names; then you agree. As one. For it is not the name, that matters, but the concept and belief, in something greater than yourself.

In a speech by Malcom X, he speaks of other religious leaders that are there, Jewish, Catholic, etc. and says they have come together to speak of community issues, but only after agreeing not to speak about religion; for they would never get anything done. But after excluding this 1 subject or "agreeing to disagree", they can move on to the issues of the community and come together to make a change. It is quickly stated, "By any means necessary," but why is it no one speaks of Malcolm X's speeches after he came back from Mecca? May 21, 1964

Mecca

A city in western Saudi Arabia, an oasis town in the Red Sea region of He-jaz, east of Jiddah, considered by Muslims to be the holiest city of Islam; population 1,385,000 (est. 2007). The birthplace in ad 570 of the prophet Muhammad, it was the scene of his early teachings before his emigration to Medina in 622 (the Hegira). On Muhammad's return to Mecca in 630 it became the center of the new Muslim faith. Arabic name Makkah.

Mecca

Mecca, officially Makkah al-Mukarramah and commonly shortened to Makkah, is a city and administrative center of the Mecca Province of Saudi Arabia, and the holiest city in Islam. It is 70 km inland from Jeddah on the Red Sea, in a narrow valley 277 m above sea level. Its last recorded population was 1,578,722 in 2015. Its estimated metro population in 2020 is 2.042 million, making it the third-most populated city in Saudi Arabia after Riyadh and Jeddah. Pilgrims more than triple this number every year during the Hajj pilgrimage, observed in the twelfth Hijri month of Dhūl-Hijjah.

Hajj

The Hajj (/hædʒ/;^[1] Arabic: حَجّ Hajj “pilgrimage”; sometimes also spelled Hadj, Hadji or Haj in English) is an annual Islamic pilgrimage to Mecca, Saudi Arabia,^[2] the holiest city for Muslims. Hajj is a mandatory religious duty for Muslims that must be carried out at least once in their lifetime by all adult Muslims who are physically and financially capable of undertaking the journey, and of supporting their family during their absence from home.^{[3][4][5]}

In Islamic terminology, Hajj is a pilgrimage made to the Kaaba, the “House of God”, in the sacred city of Mecca in Saudi Arabia. It is one of the Five Pillars of Islam, alongside Shahadah (oath to God), Salat (prayer), Zakat (alms-giving) and Sawm (fasting of Ramadan). The Hajj is a demonstration of the solidarity of the Muslim people, and their submission to God (Allah).^{[6][7]} The word Hajj means “to attend a journey”, which connotes both the outward act of a journey and the inward act of intentions.^[8]

The rites of pilgrimage are performed over five to six days, extending from the 8th to the 12th or 13th^[9] of Dhu al-Hijjah, the last month of the Islamic calendar.^[10] Because the Islamic calendar is lunar and the Islamic year is about eleven days shorter than the Gregorian year, the Gregorian date of Hajj changes from year to year. In 2021 AD (1442 AH), Dhu al-Hijjah extends from 11 July to 8 August.

The Hajj is associated with the life of Islamic prophet Muhammad from the 7th century AD, but the ritual of pilgrimage to Mecca is considered by Muslims to stretch back thousands of years to the time of Abraham. During Hajj, pilgrims join processions of millions of people, who simultaneously converge on Mecca for the week of

around the Kaaba (a cube-shaped building and the direction of prayer for Muslims), trots (walks briskly) back and forth between the hills of Safa and Marwah seven times, then drinks from the Zamzam Well, goes to the plains of Mount Arafat to stand in vigil, spends a night in the plain of Muzdalifa, and performs symbolic Stoning of the Devil by throwing stones at three pillars. After the sacrifice of an animal (can be accomplished by using a voucher), the Pilgrims then are required to either shave or trim their heads (male) or trim the ends of their hair (female). A celebration of the four-day global festival of Eid al-Adha proceeds thereafter.^{[11][12][13][14]}

Muslims may also undertake an Umrah (Arabic: فَرَمْع), or “lesser pil-grimage” to Mecca at other times of the year. However the Umrah is not a substitute for the Hajj and Muslims are still obligated to perform the Hajj at some other point in their lifetime if they have the means to do so.^[15]

According to the official published statistics between 2000 and 2019,^{[16][17][18]} the average number of attendees is 2,269,145 per year, in which 1,564,710 come from outside Saudi Arabia and 671,983 are local. The year 2012 marks the highest number of participants with 3,161,573.^[19] In June 2020, while not cancelling the Hajj outright, the

Saudi Gov-ernment announced that they would only welcome “very limited numbers” of pilgrims who are residents of Saudi Arabia due to the global COVID-19 pandemic.^[20] Similar restrictions applied in 2021, but women were per-mitted to attend without a male guardian (mehrem) provided they went in a trustworthy group.^[21]

*Too long we have taken the word of others, but I now understand that to truly take the word of someone you must define for yourself, in your processing abili-ties, what those words truly mean. When I took the time to read for myself, the door unlocked. Welcome to my world.

Declaration of Independence: A Transcription

In Congress, July 4, 1776

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen United States of Ameri-ca, When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with an-other, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should de-clare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to se-cure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, --That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, lay-ing its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Hap-piness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.--Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usur-pations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be ob-tained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole pur-pose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the meantime exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that pur-pose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers.

He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harrass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws, giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:

For Quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world: For imposing Taxes on us

For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury: For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offences

For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighbouring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundar-ies so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and de-stroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to com-pleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with cir-cumstances of Cruelty & perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavoured to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our Brittish brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the cir-cumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, there-fore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.

We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Au-thority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and de-clare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the sup-port of

begun and held at the City of New-York, on Wednesday the 4th of March 1789.

THE Conventions of a number of the States, having at the time of their adopting the Constitution, expressed a desire, in order to prevent miscon-struction or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added: And as extending the ground of public confi-dence in the Government, will best ensure the beneficent ends of its in-stitution. RESOLVED by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two thirds of both Houses concurring, that the following Articles be proposed to the Leg-islatures of the several States, as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, all, or any of which Articles, when ratified by three fourths of the said Legislatures, to be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution; viz.

ARTICLES in addition to, and Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress, and ratified by the Legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth Article of the original Constitution.

Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg Speaker of the House of Representatives John Adams, Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Attest, John Beckley, Clerk of the House of Representatives. Sam. A. Otis Secretary of the Senate. *On September 25, 1789, Congress transmitted to the state legislatures twelve proposed amendments, two of which, having to do with Congressional representation and Congressional pay, were not adopted. The remaining ten amendments became the Bill of Rights.

Amendment 1

—Freedom of Religion, Speech, and the Press

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment 2

—The Right to Bear Arms

A well-regulated Militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment 3

—The Housing of Soldiers

No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment 4

—Protection from Unreasonable Searches and Seizures

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment 5

—Protection of Rights to Life, Liberty, and Property

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

—Rights of Accused Persons in Criminal Cases

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

—Rights in Civil Cases

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

—Excessive Bail, Fines, and Punishments Forbidden

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment 9

—Other Rights Kept by the People

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment 10

—Undelegated Powers Kept by the States and the People

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.

Introduction

“Written in 1787, ratified in 1788, and in operation since 1789, the United States Constitution is the world’s longest surviving written charter of government. Its first three words — “We The People” — affirm that the government of the United States exists to serve its citizens. The supremacy of the people through their elected representatives is recognized in Article I, which creates a Congress consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The positioning of Congress at the beginning of the Constitution affirms its status as the “First Branch” of the federal government.”

The Constitution assigned to Congress responsibility for organizing the executive and judicial branches, raising revenue, declaring war, and making all laws necessary for executing these powers. The president is permitted to veto specific legislative acts, but Congress has the authority to override presidential vetoes by two-thirds majorities of both houses. The Constitution also provides that the Senate advise and consent on key executive and judicial appointments and on the approval for ratification of treaties.

lived. To date, the Constitution has been amended 27 times, most recently

For over two centuries the Constitution has remained in force because its framers successfully separated and balanced governmental powers to safeguard the interests of majority rule and minority rights, of liberty and equality, and of the federal and state governments. More a concise statement of national principles than a detailed plan of governmental operation, the Constitution has evolved to meet the changing needs of a modern society profoundly different from the eighteenth-century world in which its creators in 1992. The first ten amendments constitute the Bill of Rights.

Annotated Constitutions

The Constitution of the United States of America: Analysis and Interpretation (popularly known as the Constitution Annotated) contains legal analysis and interpretation of the United States Constitution, based primarily on Supreme Court case law.

The Constitution of the United States of America, S.PUB.103-21 (1994) (pdf), prepared by the Office of the Secretary of the Senate with the assistance of Johnny H. Killian of the Library of Congress in 1994, provided the original text of each clause of the Constitution with an accompanying explanation of its meaning and how that meaning changed over time.

Italicized text indicates words and passages of the Constitution that were changed or affected by amendments.

Original Text

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common de-fense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1 Section 2 Section 3 Section 4 Section 5 Section 6

Section 7 Section 8 Section 9 Section 10

Section 1

All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most nu-merous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have

be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

bers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Containments one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or oth-erwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies. convicted

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tem-pore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sit-ting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to re-moval from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Section 4

The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Rep-resentatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5

Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Mem-bers for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Se-crecy; and the Yeas and Nays of

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6

The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7

All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States: If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by Yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being dis-approved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8

The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings; – And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9

The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another; nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Con-sent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10

No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Let-ters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Ton-nage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agree-ment or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1 Section 2 Section 3 Section 4

Section 1

The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same

Term, be elected, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representatives from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice-President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Res-ignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as Presi-dent, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compen-sation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faith-fully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.”

Section 2

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to Grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3

He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4

The President, Vice President and all Civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1 Section 2 Section 3

Section 1

The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2

The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising un-der this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;— to all Cases affecting Amba-sadors, other public ministers and

Consuls;— to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;— to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;— to Controversies between two or more States;— between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3

Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.

Article IV

Section 1

Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2

The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3

New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regula-tions respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republi-can Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Leg-islature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Ar-ticle; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any state to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

Amendment I (1791)

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II (1791)

A well-regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III (1791)

Amendment IV (1791)

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V (1791)

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII (1791)

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Amendment VIII (1791)

Amendment IX (1791)

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X (1791)

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI (1795/1798)

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII (1804)

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;— The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;— The person having the greatest Number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII (1865)

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of per-sons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for par-ticipation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to gaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, autho-rized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any subservient; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legis-lation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV (1870)

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appro-priate legislation.

Amendment XVI (1913)

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII (1913)

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XVIII (1919)

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been

Amendment XIX (1920)

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Amendment XX (1933)

Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Amendment XXI (1933)

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII (1951)

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President, when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXIII (1961)

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State;

they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV (1964)

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV (1967)

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Amendment XXVI (1971)

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII (1992)

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

Chapter 2

Good day, welcome to The Rise of The Phoenix, The Illusion Revealed. My name is VaShawn F. Head. However, my friends call me Devlyn. I am happy to make your acquaintance. (And you are?)

I was born August 17th, 1966, around 9:00am. Although, my Zodiac sign for August would be Leo, my actual constellation Zodiac sign for the year of 1966 is Virgo.

I would like to thank you for stopping in today, and spending time with me, discussing the illusion or universal secrets I have discovered six months before I started authoring this book, in 2015. An illusion that would shut Vegas down and it happens all around us. However, to truly explain I have to share parts of my life; because the only way to reveal the illusion, you must also be willing to face the deepest darkest parts of yourself. Then even if you are brave enough, strong enough; the illusion counts on you to never be willing to divulge your sludge to expose the illusion. However, after witnessing the types of information expressed on the social mediums of today's technology, I thought I would try ex-pressing One Man's Opinion of the things I have learned, in the 55 years I have been here. If this helps just one person, well you know the rest, let's not get mushy.

First, I hope this will reach around the world, and to make sure we all start off on the right foot, so to speak, we must build a foundation. This is why the comparison glossary is in the middle of the book. We must build a common vo-cabulary, and clear understanding of the choice or context these words are being used. This is a huge part of the mystery of the illusion, understanding every indi-vidual, processes and comprehends words and their meaning on multiple scales.

Second, part of the illusion is the old sleight of hand or distraction. Oh yes, all this wonderful, wonderful technology. We often ask ourselves "Where would I be without this or that," or some phrase along those lines, you get my meaning. Well I say we may be technologically advanced in material goods, but our minds have yet to transcend. On the contrary, we have declined into our own personal shell, surrounding ourselves with as much technology as humanly possible to stay in touch with the world, from the comfort and safety of our homes. We are losing the humanity of interaction with each other. (You starting to see how this particular illusionist performs?) So I will start:

Being raised in the late 60s, early 70s I was raised with the typical concept "Spare the rod spoil the child." Like most parents of that era, "Spare the rod; spoil the child" was a common phrase. But in being honest and understanding the history that I do; it was a continuous cycle of abuse passed down from slavery times, and I speak of Old Testament slavery. (When you read the word 'Slavery' where did your thoughts first go?) Regardless by today's standards most would be thrown in jail.

[Could we stop for a moment. People, my interpretation of spare the rod spoil the child is, you try everything you can to get across your point to your child, but if you have to spank that behind on occasion, then don't feel bad about that.] It is what it is. Back then it was common to get whipped with a switch from a tree or whatever was available. (What kind of parents did you have? Do you understand their actions now? If you resent your parent's actions, are you continuing them and using your abuse as an excuse, sorry; reason.)

I was raised with, "What goes on in this house stays in this house!" Way before the Vegas slogan. I remember the one time I did speak up. It was in Saint Ann's, on Cedar and Coventry, in Cleveland Heights. Don't remember the year, but I remember getting in trouble because of the fact that I question the nun when she stated to me that; Christopher Columbus discovered America. Maybe 1st or 2nd grade. I had already been taught from a 1778 history book, which had been passed down through my family or something, not sure.

You would think that a history book written that close to what we now consider a serious time in history, would be more accurate, right? See it stated, a Viking named Leif Erikson was the first recorded to land in the northern American continent. We bounced back and forth, the sister and I; of course it was considered speaking out of turn. By the way, my grandson tells me they no longer teach Christopher Columbus discovered America. My argument then and still is how do you discover something when there are Indigenous people there.

Anyway, I tried to explain what would happen to me if my parents were called. Well a call from the Mother Teresa preceded my arrival home. Again, use your imagination, guess what happened when I got home, and being told not to be a smart ass, and that I was not given that information to challenge an adult, especially not a nun. How dare you have the audacity. Feeling the rage? Yes, I was an altar boy and, in the choir, and learning the harpsichord for choir. NO, I do not, nor do I know anything about today's current feelings as far as men of the cloth messing with children or pedophiles. My parish was to me the exact opposite. It was where I believed I was closest to being with God. That changed drastically around 9.

There are plenty of times I was whipped with an extension cord, until my legs bled. I used to hate the blood drying and my pants clinging to my legs, so I would wrap my legs with tissue paper. Then when I got home, I would get in the tub and let the tissue paper dissolve off of me. There is more, but to save time and not rehash old memories that I and my parents have discussed and forgiv-en, let your imagination run. Then step about oh, four or five steps back from the edge and I think we would be on the same page. The most important aspect of this is. I broke the cycle of abuse with my own children. At that time of being a child, I developed the mentality that, "If I have to take it from my parents, I will not tolerate it from anyone else." Looking back at it now, say what you will, it built character, it made me tough; and I developed an understanding that, "If I didn't like it being done to me, I would not allow myself to do it to others, did not matter what it was".

Although the generation may have believed in 'spare the rod spoil the child' a little too much, there were things that were very important. We did learn re-spect, a certain sense about God. We grew up understanding the phrase as 'long as you live under my roof you will follow my rules.' What that translates to is, as long as you have to live with me, you're going to listen to what I tell you. When the day comes where you can pay the rent, then you can move out and pay your own rent somewhere else.

Pat, for us to truly consider ourselves adults, as far as our parents were concerned, that meant being out on your own.

In an article entitled "The Grandparenting Generation" by Sarah Jones/ January 8, 2018, on the New Republic website, makes a reference to my cur-rent status of being a grandparent of nine grandchildren, My latest grandson Israel was just born this March; 6 lbs.7oz. Like many couples of today, the relationships shriveled, leaving the children to go between houses continually. Because of personal issues of the parents, each household has its own idealism of how to raise the children. Leaving the children to have to figure out how to behave depending on which household they are currently in.

"There are dangers in attributing trends in poverty to sexual immorali-ty, the dissolution of traditional marriages, and other cultural pathologies." "In 2014, the Census Bureau reported that 6 percent of American households had a co-resident grandparent and grandchild; in 1970, that figure was 3 percent. Sixty percent of those households were headed by grandparents; which translated to 2.7 million grandparents caring for grandchildren; a 7 percent rise from 2009, PBS NewsHour reported in 2016. This doesn't necessarily mean that these households always lack a parental presence. The bureau also reported that most children living with a grandparent had a single mother present in the household. But in these homes, grandparents take on significant caretaking responsibilities" (<https://newrepublic.com/article/146519/grandparenting-generation>)

Grandparents Raising Grandchildren

No matter how much you love your grandkids, raising them comes with many challenges as well as rewards. These guidelines can help you succeed at parenting the second time around.

The challenges of grandparents raising grandchildren

(https://www.helpguide.org/wp-content/uploads/kid-covering-

ities of parents. For many of us, grandparenting means a weekend together every now and then, an afternoon play date, an evening babysitting, a summer vacation, or chats on the phone and email exchanges here and there. But when life circumstances change — through divorce, the death of parents, or changes to a parent's work or school-related responsibilities, for example — it often falls to grandparents to assume full- or part-time responsibility for their grandchildren.

Also known as “kinship care,” a growing number of grandparents are now taking on the parenting role for their grandchildren, thus foregoing the traditional grandparent/grandchild relationship. This often means giving up your leisure time, the option of traveling, and many other aspects of your independence. Instead, you once again take on responsibility for the day-to-day maintenance of a home, schedules, meals, homework, and play dates. And if it was tragic circumstances that required you to step into the role of a parent, you'll face many other stress factors, such as coping with your own and your grandchildren's grief.

But raising your grandchildren, while challenging, can also be incredibly rewarding. Yes, you may have to deal with colicky babies or moody teenagers, but you'll also experience a much greater connection to your grandchild's world, including their school and leisure activities. You may also find yourself rolling back the years, rejuvenated by the constant companionship of much younger people. And you can derive immense satisfaction from providing your grandchildren with a safe, nurturing, and structured home environment in which to grow and feel loved.

Exploring your rights as a grandparent

Some circumstances make it necessary for grandparents to seek legal help. If there's been a divorce, death of one parent, estrangement, or the suspicion that your grandchildren are undergoing neglect or abuse, you may need to consult a lawyer or advocacy group to clarify your legal rights and ensure access to your grandchildren.

enjoying the retirement you once envisioned.

Grandparents raising grandchildren tip 1: Acknowledge your feelings The prospect of raising grandchildren is bound to trigger a range of emotions. Positive emotions, like the love you feel for your grandchildren, the joy in seeing them learn and grow, and relief at giving them a stable environment, are easy to acknowledge. It's more difficult to admit to feelings such as resentment, guilt, or fear.

It's important to acknowledge and accept what you're feeling, both positive and negative. Don't beat yourself up over your doubts and misgivings. It's only natural to feel some ambivalence about childrearing at a time when you expected your responsibilities to be dwindling. These feelings don't mean that you don't love your grandchildren.

What you may feel

Stress and worry –

If you've been used to the occasional visit from a grandchild, being back in the saddle full time can feel stressful and overwhelming. You may worry about how you will handle the additional responsibilities and what will happen to the grandkids if something happens to you.

[Read: How to Stop Worrying]

Anger or resentment – You may feel anger or resentment toward the grandchild's parents for leaving you with the responsibility of caring for their child. Or you might be resentful of other friends who are Guilt – You may feel guilty and responsible for your child’s failures as a parent, second-guessing and regretting your own mistakes when you were first parenting.

Grief – There are many losses that come with taking in your grandkids, including the loss of your independence and the easier role of “grandpar-ent,” rather than the primary caregiver. You may also be grieving for your child and the difficulties that have led to this situation.

But as far as street reputation. I would just as soon bust you in the mouth as to say hello, and often did. I never started a fight though, my father made it perfectly clear, if he ever found out I started a fight, when I got home, he would finish it. My mom may be seventy some odd years old and proud of it, but she has never stopped fighting. My dad may have had the rep, but my mom gave me my heart. She used to tell me; "You may beat me, but by god, you will know you were in a fight, so will everyone around you." My dad used to say, " Find the biggest one and beat his behind, and then everyone else will leave you alone." (See what I am saying.) Yes, my father was strict. My father at 17 years old, ask his mother to sign him into the Navy. Something happened at his high school, a choice of capital punishment, (which was allowed then) and meant being paddled by a teacher or principle. (Movie Talk (MT): School Days by spike Lee or being held back a year. He had a previous relationship that boar a child, that he was not allowed to see. A previous marriage which bore a son, and that marriage did not work, although the friendship never stopped, and then he saw my mom, which, for him was love at first sight. That relationship soured shortly after my birth, but he made a personal promise he would see one of his children graduate. Here I would like to interject. For all you parents who stay together for the sake of your children. In my case, I wish I could have been spared that.

(Are you a person whose parents stayed together for your sake? How did you feel then and how do you feel about it now?)

At 7 years old I remember my father handing me a book by Khalil Gibran called, The Prophet. (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UtcZwDOvSkg>) He expressed to me, that he may not be able to show me, because he lost his father early in his childhood, and the feelings that he had internally about the marriage, but he would know he introduced the concept, and all appropriate concepts to me by giving me this book. And although I may not understand it at that time, I would understand it over my life. I still have the book. My father was determined for me to be self-sufficient. I distinctly remember him telling me, there is no way a son of mine will ever need a woman in his life to do for him. Henceforth I learned how to sew, cook, bake, wash clothes, iron clothes, spit shine shoes, take care of the yard, and clean the house from top to bottom at a very early age. Cinderella had nothing on me.

(What are some of the earliest memories you have? Have you gone back as an adult and checked these memories?) So, from my birth until 5 years old, I had a lot of monumental moments in my life. Most of the good memories are with my mother. By around 5 years old I had experienced many unpleasant monumental moments in my life, also. I remember living on 89th and Yale St. off 105 and Saint Clair, when the apartment next to ours caught on fire, a terrible inferno. My father's quick thinking, he grabbed a water hose and while the firemen battled the blazing apartment building next to ours, he stood out there and continued watering our apartment building.

The two most tragic moments that stand out as far as interaction with the world, was being at Barnum & Bailey Circus, Downtown Cleveland and the lady falling from the trapeze and dying, no safety net, and the second one, was the "Santa Claus Line Slaying" that happened in downtown Cleveland. My mother and I stood between Jack Fitzpatrick and Tyrone Howard. Pis is the Wikipedia version.

The Santa Line Slaying

The Santa Line Slaying was a nationally publicized incident that occurred on December 21, 1971, in Cleveland, Ohio. The incident resulted in the death of one man, Jack Fitzpatrick. Tyrone Howard was convicted of man-slaughter and served 11 months in prison. In 2005, the incident attract-ed some attention again when it was revealed that Tyrone Howard is the father of actor Terrence Howard, who witnessed the incident as a young boy. Terrence Howard gave an interview on Oprah about the incident, but his account of what happened was later contradicted by his father, who accused him of trying to garner publicity for his own career.

Incident

There are differing accounts of the events that led to the death of Jack Fitz-patrick. But what is beyond dispute is this:

21-year-old Tyrone Howard and his pregnant wife took their three sons (one of whom was two-year-old Terrence) to see Santa Claus at a Hig-bee's department store in Cleveland, Ohio's Public Square. Also waiting in the long line was 36-year-old Jack Fitzpatrick who was with three of his own children while his pregnant wife shopped with their oldest daughter. At one point, the Howards were accused of cutting in the line by some of the others waiting including Fitzpatrick. An argument began between the two men. What was said in the argument and who initiated the altercation differs among witnesses. But the result was Fitzpatrick grabbed Howard, pinned him against a wall and kneed him in the groin.

Howard's groin began bleeding from a previous injury he received on his job. Howard then used a sharp object to stab Fitzpatrick several times in the thighs and neck until Fitzpatrick fell to the floor. Howard fled to his mother's home. Hours later, he turned himself in to police. Fitzpatrick was taken to a nearby hospital and died from his wounds.

According to the jury foreman, Jack Petro, "the issue of race did not come up as a factor in the jury

Aftermath

The incident made headlines in the local Cleveland newspapers who called the incident "The Santa Line Slaying". It was also widely reported in newspapers around the country. The local newspapers reported the altercation as racially motivated due to Fitzpatrick being white and Howard being black. Some witnesses claimed that racial slurs were used by Fitzpatrick. It was also reported that the weapon Howard used was a knife which he had in his jacket. Cleveland's then-Mayor Ralph Perk publicly denounced Howard as a murderer. The Episcopal bishop of Ohio called the slaying an "atrocious" and compared it to the Biblical story of Herod the Great's Massacre of the Innocents.

Howard was charged with second-degree murder and pleaded self-defense. Fitzpatrick's alleged use of racial epithets was denied by Howard's wife in the resulting trial. But she did testify that he said, "Doing things like this has set your race back five years." Howard testified that he angrily cursed at Fitzpatrick and that led to the altercation. The widow, Mary Fitzpatrick, testified that a security guard separated the two men during the scuffle, but Howard then pulled a knife from his jacket and lunged at Fitzpatrick with it. Howard and witnesses testified that while Howard was pinned against the wall, a woman handed him a nail file which he used to stab Fitzpatrick. But the nail file was never recovered, and the unidentified woman never came forward.

room.” After a long deliberation, Howard was convicted of manslaughter and received a sentence of 1-to-25 years in prison. After 11 months, Howard was paroled for good behavior. Howard had no previous criminal record before the incident. He and his wife divorced shortly after his release from prison.

Terrence Howard's version of the events

While promoting the film Crash on The Oprah Winfrey Show, Terrence Howard spoke about his father's involvement in the “Santa Line Slaying”. It was the first time he publicly spoke of the incident. As the cast of the film discussed racism in American society, Howard gave an emotional account of the altercation, which he claimed was racially motivated. In Terrence Howard's telling, when he and his mother joined the line Fitzpatrick assumed Tyrone, whose complexion is much lighter than the other Howards, was Caucasian and asked him “Why did you let those niggers cut you?” Howard said that his father told Fitzpatrick that they were his wife and kids and turned around. Terrence claimed that Fitzpatrick then grabbed his father by the throat and pinned him to the wall. He claimed that Fitzpatrick was 6'4" tall while his father stood only 5'8".

His father's incarceration caused the family to move from their suburban home to a housing project in a ghetto.

Tyrone Howard's version of the events

Tyrone was invited to appear on the program with Terrence but refused. Shortly after Terrence's account of the incident, Tyrone gave an interview to the Cleveland newspaper, The Plain Dealer, in which he claims that his son misrepresented his story and maintained that the altercation was not racially motivated.

It wasn't nothing racial that went down. It was two men standing there, both of us acting like damn fools... instead of one of us taking the man's role and walking away.

According to Howard in his interview, after standing in the long line for about 30 minutes, he told his pregnant wife to take Terrence and find a place to sit down. Approximately 45 minutes later, Howard and his sons were close to the front of the line. Howard called for his wife and youngest son to join him in the line. Other people waiting in the line, including Fitzpatrick, did not realize that the woman entering the line was Howard's wife and accused him of letting her cut in. Howard cursed at Fitzpatrick and yelled “If you have anything to say to my wife, say it to me!” Fitzpatrick said, “That's a cheap trick, buddy!” and at that point grabbed Howard and pinned him against the wall. After Fitzpatrick fell to the floor from the stabbing, Howard knelt down and tried to put pressure on Fitzpatrick's wounds to stop the bleeding. Some witnesses advised him to flee and he did so in fear. In the interview, Howard expressed remorse for initiating the altercation which led to Fitzpatrick's slaying.

Tyrone Howard said of his son's appearance on Oprah:

Oprah wanted a sob story; he was there with a sob story. Terrence needed publicity, and I became the meat. I was the feast that day.

After Tyrone Howard's revelation, Terrence's account of the events was removed from the Oprah website and replaced with a different part of his interview.

Fitzpatrick family's version

According to the Fitzpatrick's, Jack did nothing to initiate the altercation and was simply defending himself, though evidence shows he was the initial aggressor. They testified that the Howards cut in the line numerous times and Jack told them “It’s not right to sponge in line.” (How-ard’s wife and other witnesses also testified that Fitzpatrick said words to that effect.) In response to Terrence Howard’s statements, Jack’s daughter, Peggy, who was nine years old at the time, maintained in The Plain Dealer that since Fitzpatrick was a seminarian, he was not a man who was prone to violence. She also denied Terrence Howard’s claim of her father’s large size, stating that Fitzpatrick was 5'8". She also expressed some admiration for Terrence Howard for overcoming his traumatic childhood to become a successful actor. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Santa_Line_Slaying

Her fifty minutes YouTube video shows, in the beginning some other new articles written in various cities. There are very serious racial tones all through the various articles including a mayor and bishop being appalled of the incident. (After watching the video please express your feelings after reading the Wikipedia version of today verses the articles of the times.)

Now up until I started this book, I remembered the event as me seeing Santa Claus being killed right before my eyes. I was five years old and remembered a lot of chaos,

- ♠ I was supposed to see Santa Claus
- ♠ I did not get to sit on Santa Claus’s lap and tell him what I wanted for Christmas
- ♠ Santa Clause must be the one who got stabbed

May I ask you a Question? If I was five and that is how I dealt with a life being taken right before my eyes, how do you think Mr. Terrance Howard dealt with it and if I recall he was, to a five-year-old, just a toddler? (How do you think you would have dealt with it?) First, as has been repeatedly expressed and old by now, this is one man’s opinion, and I am NO psychiatrist and I have much respect for the professional. Second, I do not know Mr. Terrance Howard personally, although I almost had a chance to meet him when he was supposed to be in a play here in Cleveland; sadly, he did not appear another actor took his place. Third, I do not pretend to know the mind of the man. But come on, a toddler, all the chaos?

His father did the most courageous and honorable thing. Any man should hope to aspire to have the same in a situation of such magnitude. I humble my-self before him. (What about you? Could you just turn yourself in?) The 70’s were a turbulent time of racism and oppression. He had to know the justice system would be completely against him because of the violent times. So as the rappers would say, “Bow down, the man deserves plenty props and represented!” (What do you think about the story?)

Please forgive this break, but this is a very personal and deeply rooted part of my life; of the very makeup and building stone for who I am now. So, I break to give detail and share my mother’s version with you, what happened after she whisked me away from the scene of the crime.

My mother worked downtown, apparently through surveillance, they found my mom and made her testify. They put her on the stand, and she gave the accounts as she saw them. She was interrupted when she got to the part about Mr. Tyrone Howard defending himself and that Mr. Jack Fitzpatrick did make racial slurs against Mr. Tyrone Howard and put his hands-on Mr. Howard, henceforth, it was not murder but self-defense.

The prosecutor or somebody demanded it be stricken from the record because she was not asked to give her opinion. My mom felt it was not an opinion but a fact; if the man in front would not have put his hands on the man behind us, well... And when I heard her side of the event and what we saw, I also heard the passion and yes, even hurt, for she believed Mr. Howard would have to serve his full sentence for she was unaware of his early release. She went on to express the anger at the fact she watched him be found "GUILTY OF MURDER" the thought that, Mr. Tyrone Howard would have to spend twenty years to life; yes it upset her to say the least. Hell "It Pissed Her Off!" However, I and my wife SaLisa were able to share with her the Wikipedia version, and all the details of Mr. Tyrone Howard's plight. I even recorded her surprise and joy of the outcome on my phone. I was able to go "back to the future" so to speak, to bring joy to her in the present by using technology, once again. How my wife found the story in Wikipedia is completely unrelated, to the book. She had been searching for information on Mr. Terrance Howard and Ms. Oprah Winfrey's latest movie. Those are two of her favorite people. In reading Mr. Terrance Howard bio, she saw "Santa Line Stabbing" and wondered if it could be related to my 'Santa Claus being killed' and presto.

Audio recording January 19, 2015, part 1

transcribed by SaLisa Berry Head

VaShawn: So much happened last night that it's difficult to go over ev-erything. It's been a long time (inaudible) because I finally see the whole picture. That I don't know? You left early so you really don't know, so let me catch you up to speed. You left at about five till seven, it might be rambling, it might be misconstrued, I mean a (inaudible) here and there.

VaShawn: I got hit with so much last night (inaudible) VaShawn Jr, and many different epiphanies (inaudible) with Cisco last night. First of all, I had a deep thought, Constantine 315bc, who was a ruler. (Let me sum-marize the little bit I know about Constantine then we can go from there. As I recollect, he saw that the idealism or the faith that he was (Neo-Pagan) was about to be forced out, different religious factions were on the rise. Catholicism leading the pack. So, he sat down and came up with a plan. He called all of the other religious leaders together. The meeting basically was about sharing the religious artifacts he had acquired, artifacts spoken of in the Old Testament, etc... by sharing the artifacts, there would be no reason for a religious war, each leader's artifact would support the idealism that they had about their specific faith and religion. Everybody would basically share and share alike, there's enough people, or at least that is what I recalled at the start of the book!)

But this is where I think the epiphany hit me after (inaudible) we gonna find out. Power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Once the leaders of their specific faith got the items in their hands, human nature kicked in. Now I have an artifact to support the fact that what I'm saying is right, this is why you should follow me. That's when the idea of faith switched over to a belief. Now why am I making a difference between the idealism and the belief, because one of my favorite movies "Dogma". There is a scene in there where Chris Rock and the other young lady, who is supposed to be the Scion, the last family member of Christ. He explains to her that he supposed to be the thirteenth apostle and he's not in the book, that he's the only black man.

We'll get into that later. But he's the only black man, and Jesus was a black man, yes everybody knows the reference: skin of bronze, hair of wool, and everything like that. Supposedly in the movie there were normally two black men. The reason they kicked him out and changed the race was because 'when ya'll found out that ya'll was getting this really good information and knowledge, ya'll couldn't contend that it was coming from a black man.'

He goes into speaking about the mistakes of religion, of the biggest mistake, that God has with religion is the belief structure. She said, "well I don't see any reason for people to have a problem, you know, believing in something," or something along those lines. He says to her, "yes it's okay to have a belief, but belief kills. People murder and kill each other over a be-lief, an idea you can change. Look at all the crimes that have been committed to humanity in the name of God and Jesus Christ. Then,(inaudible) I don't know if you were there when I had this conversation with Cisco. I went through the four things he saw, so forth and so on.

VaShawn: I called my mom, and I ran it down to her, I let her know ev-erything that was going on. I wanted her to know ahead of time because I had made my peace with my issues.

Mommy: "What's wrong?" I was crying, laughing, filled with ambrosia.

VaShawn: "Nothing, absolutely nothing." You know, I told her everything, about Constantine, the time that I believe is when the idea of human nature, kicked in, an idea became a belief.

The book of Eli with Denzel Washington,(<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zSMHmtaoXtI>) (one of my favorite artist, is basically surviving the end of the world. Eli is on a quest with a very special book, to get it from point A to point B. There is a bad guy, leader of the twisted remains of the world. He is in search of this same particular book. It is a book of inspiration and hope. He feels that if he controls that inspiration, if he controls that hope, he can control the new world. He can bring the people together to come to him and rule them. That's, pretty much the whole principle of the movie. Naturally, the bad guy loses, and Eli gets to where he needs to be, but at that moment, all through that movie Eli was fighting. He's pulling out guns, he's shooting people, the whole nine yards. Now this is my interpretation of the movie, at the end of the movie; when he finally makes it to his destination to get the book, which winds up being the Holy Bible, to someone else that can transcribe word for word of the Bible. A tool for power,(I made a reference to it the movie I had watched last night.

What I took from the movie was, Eli was blind. The reason he is the only per-son who can read it is because he's blind. The Bible is in braille, so he has to get it to someone, read that Bible to them, then they rewrite it, amazing. But that's the power in a movie, once again a movie. That showed you the power of that book. Those references are all through movies and we know that. Spoiler alert here.

After that I talked to her, about the things going in the book. I let her know about my childhood memories, ones that I remembered. I let her know about the situations that came up for me to put in the book.

To make a long story short, my mom was very overwhelmed. Fearful of the message my book was bringing. I always speak about; stop, look, listen, think and speak. I told her that I knew I could say nothing to ease her mind, because that is a mother's love for her child. I know the things that I'm saying is going to be very, very powerful and controversial. But I know momma, that you know I must.

Salisa: You know, maybe, just maybe, in the future you could be looked at as the prophet, the book a new Bible.

VaShawn: No. it cannot be looked at as the new Bible. The Old Testament were the rules on how to treat each other with respect and dignity. The Justice System, for those who commit the crimes, and the punishment is clearly defined. The hugest problem, or (1 of many), with the Bible; there are certain things that are straight forward, this is what to do if not this is how it is handled. Then there are other things that are more exaggerated, let's just say. So, people have trouble with how that can be real, how can that be true, how this, that, and so forth.

Well, it hit me last night, those stories were the movies. Those stories were meant to give, inspiration or to give morals. To prove a point of what was being said and, why it needed to be done. To gather feeling and emotion behind the story, not necessarily to know all the points, literally in the Bible. If that was their movies, like we have movies with under tones of morality. Think about any movie with a man being told that he has to finish his destiny, automatically starts off being some type of criminal or imperfect. He comes along the path by force, he must correct all the things that are wrong in him, and see the true one path, and to fore fill his destiny. That's continuous in all the movies. All of that is the same and that's what's in the Bible. As far as Jesus Christ is concerned in the New Testament; Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John are four different perceptions or interpretations of their life with their best friend. He was very generous and unique, he was the oddity, the anomaly, the Neo, and he was a man. If you think about the Bible, when everyone came to him, Jesus Christ you're the son of God. What he says is that we are all children of God, repeatedly. I don't believe in The Word, we are fighting over words, we have lost sight of the real question. I believe in the powers that be, whatever you choose to call Your Higher Power. That's extremely important for people to start to understand and to know. Jesus goes from age twelve to thirty-three, as soon as he's on the scene, he's the bomb.

But what if Jesus was an O.G. of his time. What if he's a street person that found where to change his life and turning it around. Understood that the only way he would be able change people was to show by example, just a thought.

After some time of listening to my mom, I begin telling my mother that I understood every moment of my entire life was for a reason; good, bad, or in differential. The epiphany of my father, when I was seven years old giving me a book. I expressed to her, "Mom you don't know this per say, because you weren't there, he gave me this book. He said, 'I want you to take this and read it. You're not going to understand it all, but at least I know I introduced you to it (inaudible)'. That was an attempt at changing the cycle". I apologized to my mother because I thought I was the one that changed the abuse cycle. Now with my vision cleared, every day is a new, separate comprehension. I realized now that was his step, him sending me to Tennessee when I got ready to go to the Marines, with grandfather and the events that happened there. When I came back and told him what happened down there. He didn't say anything, nothing at all, except did you figure out what you needed to do? I expected him to tell me I was crazy. My reply, "I am not going." That was him, to the best of his ability trying to change and break the cycle. It only took forty-eight years for me to mature and appreciate his gesture, I told her I was sorry.

They did the best they could. Like most of us, wrapped around emotions of a relationship, they didn't know any better. Last night, I had a vision about my grandson. The universe, I (inaudible) When I was little, I had made up my mind not to be anything like my father, to break what he did, what my parents did and make sure I didn't do it to my children, I did my best. (I now had a chance to fine tune, a few things with my grandbaby. I learned from all that, and guaranteed even with his parents going through all their changes, that they were going through. (Inaudible) Salisa and I were talking about how special he was, I had to help her remember she spent the day with him yesterday, watching him.)

Salisa: He was wonderful, amazing. Just three, a baby, a toddler. But he is so smart, so intelligent, (which we all recognized early on.) When you have chastised him; after you have talked to him, he immediately comprehends, and he explains he's fine with it. He immediately knows you're telling him out of love. That you're getting on him out of love.

VaShawn: Do you recall a few issues you had in the beginning, truthfully.

SaLisa: Yes, okay, but you have a magical relationship with your grand-son. (Everybody says that. I pray I am that way with all my family.) You can reprimand him and afterwards, he's right back all over you, in your lap an everything.

VaShawn: (I told her she got to see it today), I saw the glow in you today when I had to chastise him about something he was doing. All I did was put my arms out, then he would come to me and hug me. He ran and jumped into my lap, he knows that anything that's told to him here, is going to be for his own good, and because he shouldn't do it. So, he un-derstands that.

Mommy: Yes, you started from day one, not being distracted with your own personal business, he got the start that he needed.

VaShawn: Mommy, I don't care what anybody says, I know the things I remember. (I began going over them with my mother.)

"Mom I have to let you know I'm putting it in the book. That technically speaking by today's standards, as punishment goes, dad and you would be put underneath the jail." But if truth be known, a lot of my generation's parents would be put underneath the jail, because the belief was "Spare the rod, and spoil the child," that's all they knew. I now realized my father broke the cycle, as far as the mental. Books like Khalil Gibran and The Prophet, at seven years old I understood it, far better than I thought. It has always been the guiding light for me on how to be, no matter what. My father also gave me another gift when I came to him about religion. A very, very true gift, he told me to go find out for myself. 'Read it for yourself and make your own decision, to make up your own mind.' He didn't try and lead me or tell me how I should be. Even at an early age my Nana said, "You're going to be special, and do great things." It took four generations to get it right.

We haven't had four generations since the 50's in any one house at one time. That's four generations, (inaudible).

VaShawn: I remember a favorite cousin; Tom Thumb and I were in a picture together with me feeding him and holding him. I may have been about a half an inch taller than he was. Like Pheonix feeding (at the time potential brother) Nickoli.

I remember playing underneath the table when she had some girl-friends over. They were talking about how well-mannered I was, how beau-tiful I was and cute I was. My mother's response,"Sh#@, he didn't come out that way,” to put it nicely, “It was a lot of work making him look nor-mal.” (She didn’t respond after hearing this.) I went on to say, “You actually said ‘He came out looking like a damn frog.’ “ I remember us being on 89th, there was an exchange of discrepancies, tomato, to ma toe, potato patato.

VaShawn: I told her I remember the apartment buildings next to us catch-ing on fire. The back two apartment buildings were an inferno. After, they tore the buildings down. But the fire had got so close, there was a scorch burn on the outside of our apartment, only one window away from our apartment. I remember going to the circus when I was a little boy, and the woman on the tightrope falls and dies. I remembered, being downtown and Santa Claus being stabbed. (I went through everything else and by the conclusion) I asked, “So mom, what do you think?” (Do you know with everything I said to her, her reply was?)

Mommy: “Since you’re gonna put it in a book, I would like to clarify one event.” (Like, wow, really, only one,) (chuckling), (I didn’t say anything, that’s what was in my head.)

Mommy: It was the Santa Claus line murder.

VaShawn: Santa Claus line murder?

Mommy: Yes baby, there was a white man in front of us and a black man behind us, the white man started chastising the black man and basically disrespected him. The black man had a knife, and he pulled the knife and stabbed the white man. The way my mother rushed me out of there, not to get involved, because we were literally right between the two men. (It hit me, then as a child, even though I was right there and saw it perfectly, the mind of a five-year-old was I wanna see Santa Claus, I was unable to see Santa Claus. My memory absorbed it as Santa Claus was stabbed.)

VaShawn: We had to get away?

Mommy: “Yes baby that’s what happened. I got you out of there.” (See I remember them questioning her? My memory was it happened right then.)

She continued, “I got you out of there. Baby I worked downtown, they came and found me two or three days later, they subpoenaed me. When I tried to tell them that, the white man started it that’s the reason the black man stabbed him.” They didn’t want to hear it, they sent him to jail.

VaShawn: Is that all?

Mommy: Yes, (Anger and sadness in her reply).

VaShawn: Ma this is for you. Remember how I’m always telling you that story about the rich white-collar worker who goes and embezzles eight billion dollars from the company. In turn thousands of people lose their job, one of those individuals has a family of four. He walks the streets from sun rise to sunset for three months, trying to find a job. This man was an engineer and he’s going into McDonalds trying to find a job, fryer or whatever is available, he can’t find a thing. 1 day he comes home, and his wife stands in the kitchen, cabinets open and bare. He goes out and starts looking through garbage cans. He finds an empty gun. Down the street a twenty-four-hour convenient store. He goes in and steals food, which one is wrong? (So, what is your opinion? Which 1 is wrong?)

A man stabbed another man, in truth it is tragic the cause, that one man with his family, had a superiority complex, and thought he had a right to disrespect another human being based on race and color. The other man feeling the oppression of the times and with his family stressed because of that same subject of race. (inaudible) his disrespecting another man and stabbed and killed him. But a life was taken.

I lost my faith at 9 years old. I remember it was a Sunday. I was at mass with my mother. There is a sequence during mass where you turn to your neighbors and say "May the Lord be with you. And you respond, " And also with you!". Think of the time period and you have an idea of the ratio of African Americans and Caucasians in Cleveland Heights. I remember the gentleman's face as clear as day. Sorry faded there.

My mom drove a 77 Oldsmobile, or a tank I use to imagine. It died that Sunday right at the start of an exit drive from the parking lot. She was so embarrassed and rattled, constantly cranking that key. After what seemed like an eternity to a child, the honking began. It seemed to get louder and longer every tick of my Mickey Mouse watch.

I wiggled out of my seat belt to look over the seat, and it was the Caucasian man, that had so graciously just shook my hand and blessed me? Needless to say, concepts changed drastically on THAT day. Yeah, for sure, that day would be it.

Let's see, how was I in my early elementary years. Well I can surmise it by expressing an achievement that I was given at fourteen. I was awarded from the Cleveland Heights library on Lee Rd., an award which stated that I had read every book in the library. Back then you had to sign books out on a card, and every card had my signature. Now I must be brutally honest by explaining to you, that I had all the time in the world, seeing how I was on punishment nine months out of the year, you do the math.

As far as my late teen years after graduating, and before my first marriage I was a terrible person, that is not an exaggeration but an honest to goodness truth. As I stated earlier, I grew up with the mentality that if I had to accept it from my parents, I would not tolerate it from anyone else. Which in turn made me feel I would just prefer to hurt you as to help you. If you could imagine it or visualize it and it was something terrible I did it or knew someone who did. I was vicious and non-caring about a lot of things. But once I made the commitment to my wife and son of six months and left Cleveland to reunite with them in Texas, I have been on the road of paying penance for every wrong or sin I committed.

*Let's see what might be considered juicy dirt to get out of the way. Oh yeah, I have two wives. Yes, they are aware of each other. Yes, they actually live in the same house. I even had three wives at one time. No, it is not bigamy that would be illegal, silly, legally married 30+ years; my first wife and we renewed our vows on our 25th anniversary, at the justice of the peace. My second wife, who chose to bind herself to me, has been with me for 20+ years. It is called polygamy. Wait a minute. Stop and think, I said think not fantasize. Before you go to judging me here are a few facts.

Divorce rates in America soar by 34% during the COVID-19 pandemic with marriages crumbling three weeks into quarantine and newlywed separations doubling to 20 percent

- Data from Legal Templates indicates that divorce rates soared during the first four months of the COVID-19 pandemic
- A combination of pandemic stress, including unemployment and quarantine, may have contributed to the uptick
- There was a 34% increase in sales for divorce agreements compared to 2019
- Interest in divorce spiked on April 13, which is approximately three weeks after most states implemented lockdown orders
- Southern states in the Bible Belt recorded the highest number of divorce rates, per Legal Templates
- Newlyweds married under five months were hit the hardest, but those married within five years also sought divorces

Bystander syndrome

Pelican: [watching a fellow pelican choke] Hey, hey, Nigel. Heh, would you look at that? Sun's barely up and already Gerald's had more than he can handle.

Nigel: Yeah. Reckon somebody ought a help the poor guy.

[all the pelicans murmur and nod, but none actually go to help]

Nigel: ...well, don't everybody fly off at once.

— Finding Nemo

Somebody is begging for help — but no help is forthcoming. As far as by-standers are concerned, it's somebody else's problem: either a hero will swoop in and save the day, or a different bystander, one who is far more qualified, will step up and do the job.

It can be one of the reasons why the heroes are the only ones dealing with the matter, even if they don't have the adequate resources for it. It can also explain why they often grow to think that they must personally deal with everything. This can become a self-reinforcing pattern, as the presence of heroes leads average citizens to wait for them to solve problems.

In some cases, this may actually be the sensible solution if the by-stander would do more harm than good trying to directly intervene. If Bob's house catches fire, Alice might call 911 and get the fire department but she won't go in to try and fight the fire or save anyone herself, since she'd probably just get in the way. The firefighters have the equipment and training to deal with the situation better than Alice ever could. They would consider any “help” she provided to be Unwanted Assistance and might just make things worse if she messes up somehow. Compare Apathetic Citizens and Callousness Towards Emergency. May overlap with Unusually Uninteresting Sight. When authorities are cursed with this, see Adults Are Useless, There Are No Therapists, and Police Are Useless. See also All-Powerful Bystander and Social Media Before Reason. Contrast Samaritan Syndrome, wherein people in authority aren't cursed with this and it drives them nuts, and Who Will Bell the Cat?, where they are deeply concerned until the onus is put on them. If someone with this view is pushing it onto others, it becomes Not Your Problem as well. If they get called out for this or are punished for this, then it's Accomplice by Inaction.

If someone doesn't help out of spite, that's Refuse to Rescue the Disliked. If a hero who could easily solve the problem doesn't get involved for some reason, see Superman Stays Out of Gotham.

Sometimes this is used to demonstrate avariciously that Humans Are Bastards. It can be Truth in Television, as shown in social psychology. Ironi-cally, the famous case of the murder of Kitty Genovese that's still cited as the definitive example and that inspired research into the phenomenon didn't actually involve the trope; the story about dozens of people just watching her being murdered on a public street (in broad daylight, yet) is based on a newspaper article that was mostly false. ^{note}

Since the turn of the 21st Century, increased scrutiny has been giv-en to the Bystander Effect by psychologists and it's increasingly viewed with scepticism. While the small-scale lab experiments conducted in the 20th Century did show a hesitancy for people to intervene when they were in groups, this was something that only happened when the sub-jects knew they were in a test and therefore that the “emergency” wasn't real. In actual emergency situations, people showed far less hesitancy to act when in groups. And when they did hesitate it tended to be for reasons like fear of getting hurt (as if someone's already in danger then it would also logically also be dangerous for a random person who lacks proper training or equipment to get involved). However, that research has yet to percolate into fiction so it's likely to be a long time before Bystander Syndrome becomes a Dead Horse Trope. <https://tvtropes.org/pmwiki/pmwiki.php/Main/BystanderSyndrome>

2021 UPDATE: How COVID-19 Affected the Divorce Rate in 2020

ROTHARMEL SHANKS, LLC

‘There is no question that during the COVID-19 pandemic many married couples have struggled with job losses, unexpected homeschooling, the death of loved ones, and so many other traumas. While it is still too early to tell what the full effect of Covid-19 will be on marriages in the United States, we can take a look at some of the preliminary data.

Marriage and Divorce Prior to Covid-19

According to the Institute of Family Studies, the American divorce rate in 2019 hit a fifty-year low with only 14.9 marriages out of 1000 marriages ending in divorce. This report was accompanied by Census Data stating that “the median duration of current marriages in the U.S. has increased almost one year in the recent decade, from 19 years in 2010 to 19.8 years in 2019.” You can see the chart from the IFS below.

Covid's Effect on Interest in Divorce

During the Spring of 2020, we began to experience lockdowns in many localities. The strain of being forced together and the added difficulty of homeschooling pushed many couples to research their options for divorce. One online divorce-form provider stated that they experienced a 34% increase in the purchase of their online divorce-forms in the Spring of 2020 compared to the same time in 2019.

The company found that users from the Southern United States pursued divorce on their site 2-3 times as much as other regions in the United States. The company also found that 58% of users interested in divorce were married less than 5 months.

Purchasing a divorce-form online does not necessarily indicate that the divorce has been filed. It only suggests someone has taken an active step toward a divorce filing. Let's look at what the early numbers show from divorce filings in 2020.

Preliminary Data From Divorce Filings in States

It is still too early to have all the data on 2020 divorce filings in the United States; however, there are some states that post their reporting in real-time. Virginia sociology professor Brad Wilcox found that “data...from four out of five states reporting divorce in real-time — Arizona, Florida, Missouri, Rhode Island and Oregon — indicate that divorce has fallen.”

suggest a rise in official divorce applications, which is a trend the US will probably follow.

On January 6th, NPR's Morning Marketplace Report featured a Bowling Green State University demographic study on Marriage and Divorce in 2020. The study looked at many of the same states as the report from the Institute of Family Studies and found a sizable drop in divorce. In New Hampshire, the divorce rate fell by as much as 36% in 2020.

As mentioned above, this information is preliminary and does not necessarily mean the pandemic strengthened couples' relationships and helped stave off divorce. Considerations as to why divorce rates fell in these states could be court closures, less income to pay for a divorce, and reliance on a spouse for housing and lockdown child care.

What 2021 Has in Store for Marriage and Divorce in America.

As Americans begin to get the vaccine and are reintroduced to a state of normalcy, it is likely that 2021 will see an uptick in divorces. Last month, the BBC reported that figures in Saudi Arabia, Indonesia and the Chinese cities of Xi'an and Dazhou

We plan to see many of the Americans who were prevented from filing divorces last year begin to file this year. On January 4, 2021, our firm received more calls regarding divorce than any day in 2020. This increased call volume could be due to the issuance of stimulus checks and people waiting until after the holidays to pursue their divorces. However, many of the callers are telling us that this year they are ready to move on with their relationships and from the pandemic's toll on their emotional well-being.

Do not delay seeking medical care if you have an emergency or serious health problem.

Considering Separation or Divorce?

If you have thought about separation or divorce during the COVID pandemic, you are not alone. The stress of the pandemic, combined with financial challenges and increasingly close confines with your spouse is enough to strain even the healthiest of marriages. If you find yourself feeling overwhelmed by relationship troubles, here are four simple steps you can take to regain control of your life and choose the best path moving forward:

- Step One: If you are being abused by your spouse, seek help right away. Call 911 if you are in danger or call a trusted family lawyer for help. Click here for Statewide resources in Louisiana for Victims of Domestic Violence.
- Step Two: If you love your spouse and would like to salvage your relationship, reach out to an experienced Louisiana family therapist for guidance.
- Step Three: If your efforts to save your relationship fail, or if you would like to move forward with a divorce, contact an experienced family lawyer.
- Step Four: Take care of your physical and mental health.

By following these four steps, you will be able to put your best foot forward and live a happier, healthier life. My father used to say, "Don't throw rocks when you live in a glass house." Most of the people I know stress out about 'baby mama and baby daddy drama. In my situation, my wives allow me to be their king. My blessing is not having multiple women, but having any woman, let alone two or three love me and all I have to do is be myself. My true self. We live by the Old Testament laws of Leviticus; we do not cast our relationships aside. We understand our roles. Not our place, but our roles. The natural roles of masculine and feminine. Later I will break down the concepts of masculine and feminine, which we all have inside. Before you began to quote, The Holy Bible, The King James version, let me ask you this; what does version mean? A particular form of something, differing in certain respects, from an earlier form or other forms of, the same type of thing. Exactly! There are over 20 different versions of the bible.(This will be broken down later in the religion chapter.) Monogamists use the Bible as the pretense to polygamy being against the word of God, but Samuel Chapman challenges this monumental corner stone written by Robert J. Hitchens.

Multiple Marriage : A Study of Polygamy in Light of the Bible Robert J.
Hitchens An Extended Review and Rebuttal by Samuel Chapman
Published 1987 by Doulos, Elkton, Maryland ISBN 0 9617379 1 3

Introduction

<https://read-download-books.com/v6/preview/?pid=6>

Not one for wasting your time thinking about the arguments, Dr. Hitchens decides to start with his conclusion that sin has 'caused a departure from monogamy, God's original plan for marriage.' This is important. If you read the Bible without preconceived ideas about marriage you would never come up with this idea. Monogamists have to get their ideas in first and then talk about the Bible, explaining away the material in there. In truth, the Bible is not the source of the teaching of monogamy, it is an embarrassment to monogamists. He then wanders off into describing the various types of what he calls polygamy. So, we learn of 'simultaneous polygamy' and 'consecutive polygamy', of 'group marriage' and of 'polyandry', of 'concubinage' and... well, pretty soon you've got a lot of fundamentally different concepts all suddenly sheltering under the polygamy umbrella. The normal believer in biblical polygamy suddenly finds himself with many strange bedfellows (the pun is intended). The reprehensible 'consecutive polygamy' of which the author speaks is more normally called 'serial monogamy'.

So, right at the outset, it is clear that the author is not only looking at biblical polygamy, he is considering a wide range of practices that can be squeezed into the definition of polygamy, and not simply a set of scriptural arguments. This is not to input any malice or wrongdoing to the author; I suppose it is difficult to write a Christian book which seeks to establish monogamy as the Christian standard. After all, it would be a very thin book, and it is always embarrassing to write a book so thin that it won't support itself on a bookshelf.

The author is just getting into his introduction when fate descends upon him and....

Look: after my 1st wife and I separated, shortly after our son's birth, she let it be known divorce was her overall goal. After seeing her and my child leave for Texas, I found roommates. "Tommy" who was the head bouncer at the Mining Company on Ridge and Brookpark and I HAD AN AGREEMENT ON RENT. Whoever brought the most women home by end of month had to pay rent. I didn't pay for three months, Tommy moved out the third month. 1 rule; no duplicate females, in a week. This meant double or triple encounters in 1 night. Tommy was considered the "bomb" especially with the Caucasian Ladies. They seemed to love dark chocolate.

My apologies'. I've just been reminded; that I've left out a very important point, before, my first wife and child left for Texas. Many who knew me and my reputation knew me as let's say 'Casper'. Since I am often told I am very cryptic, you figure out the name. About three months after my son's birth I had enough since to know I was putting my family in jeopardy and had to quit the streets.

I had to leave Cleveland, in the middle of the night and was forced to take my child with me. It was in the middle of the winter and where we settled after a long journey only had 1 room with a broken furnace. It may have been below 20 degrees outside and a blizzard, but that room's thermostat read 106 degrees. My son needed changing and like a bolt of lightning striking an oak, I looked down and saw the frail gift looking back at me and realized "He needed me". He needed me. Me, to ensure he never felt the hurt, pain, and lack of love I felt when I was a kid. He needed me to show him how Not to follow my miserable existence up until that point. He; needed me, to guarantee he had a chance at a good family life. I WAS A DADDY, not father and those of you hopefully understand. Now my conviction was even stronger.

By the graces and respect I had earned, I would be officially released from all obligations to the street. Proud of myself, and with new found purpose we raced back to Cleveland. But, when we got back, even though I had tried to leave baby boy with her at her job, and she agreed he would be safest with me, she'd had enough. Now back to our original programming, lol.

So after "Tommy" moved out. I got serious; I had done enough hoeing. Found a management job at a restaurant, and because I had shown so many associates that you could still be a TRUE GENTLEMAN, and that pulled the ladies even more. The Horseman were born. A click that gave a 200-question, initiation to see if you understood what a real gentleman was. We grew to 450 strong, and my right-hand brother was G-Man; Love you brother. See we believed 'You go we go.' 'Ride or die!' That meant something then, completely different from now. It meant all for one and one for all; wait! We didn't use guns. We handled business with our hands 1-on-1. The crew was there to make sure no one else jumped in. Win, lose or draw, it was always 1-on-1. To jump somebody was straight coward-ly, and pay back when they were caught alone was a B%$#@o.

So 1 Saturday morning I call my partner. His sister answered, we had nev-er met, but that phone call lasted for 3 hours until we both agreed we needed to meet. Sparks flew as soon as she answered the door and a very short while we were both moving on together from previously dissolved relationships. Three months into our relationship and never once disagreeing or arguing about any-thing, well on our way to commitment I received a letter from my wife. She stated my son needed me. I showed my new lady the letter and we talked. I will never forget her words. " You know I love you. I know you love me. But I know what you did for your son, and he NEEDS you. If we are meant to be then we will be, but the kind of man you are, I have no choice. You have to go." Don't get mushy because this next part you will still see the hybrid in me.

After preparations and time, I was finally ready to go, and spent my last day and night with her, dropped her off and hit the road for Texas. What should have only taken 3 days took 7 days. I tell you Cleveland doesn't believe in letting you go by no means. After three serious situations occurred before I even hit Columbus, pulling out of Columbus I made up my mind 1 more thing happened and apparently it must Not be meant to be. But, I finally arrived in Houston, in the middle of the night.

My wife greeted me with open arms, and I received her permission to tell this part to the world. The door flew open, and she had a smile that would have lit the southern sky. Here's the hybrid coming out. "Stop, I said putting up my hand. Let's get something straight. I've told you about my lady back in Cleveland and what we agreed. Now I am a man of my word and coming here, means I have made a commitment to be a real father, and husband and family man for our child. But don't get it twisted. I am here for my son, as of right now. It will take time for you and me to get back what I thought we had. But I make this solemn vow to you, I will be the man you and he deserve with time. We will get it back. But I don't pretend. So do you still want me to come in? She stepped aside; I saw my son crawling for the first time. He was eight months old, or so.

The first few months were difficult, old dogs die hard, and Houston has some of the most beautiful women. I must tell you about 1 in particular. Names unimportant, I met her out 1 night while I was alone checking out downtown Houston, she was Tia Carr, Beyonce, and a Victoria Secrets model, gorgeous. She could make a blind man see, lame man walk, and a beggar steal, Bad. We exchanged numbers and a real friendship grew. She helped me see my wife's side in things and I helped her with her relationships and the cruel situation of a date trying to force himself on her. Oh Houston women hold their own too, don't get it twisted. However, we seemed to never be able to kick it together. After six months or so, and we were best friends I wanted us to do something together. I remember the phone call.

"So how about some lunch or dinner together to celebrate my promotion? You know I am a gentleman and you don't have to worry if you were with me'.

She had become very apprehensive about dating needless to say. What came out her mouth floored me. "Boo", she began, and I could hear her perk up and become 'FYI with me. "Baby I am not hardly worried about you, not at all;

*it's me. I know if we go out together you are GOING TO give me some, or I'm going to rape you." Silence...

Are gender and sex the same? Usage

Guide Noun

The words sex and gender have a long and intertwined history. In the 15th century gender expanded from its use as a term for a grammatical subclass to join sex in referring to either of the two primary biological forms of a species, a meaning sex has had since the 14th century; phrases like “the male sex” and “the female gender” are both grounded in uses established for more than five centuries. In the 20th century sex and gender each acquired new uses. Sex developed its “sexual intercourse” meaning in the early part of the century (now its more common meaning), and a few decades later gender gained a meaning referring to the behavioral, cultural, or psychological traits typically associated with one sex, as in “gender roles.” Later in the century, gender also came to have application in two closely related compound terms: gender identity refers to a person’s internal sense of being male, female, male nor female; gender expression refers to the physical and behavioral manifestations of one's gender identity. By the end of the century gender by itself was being used as a synonym of gender identity.

Among those who study gender and sexuality, a clear delineation between sex and gender is typically prescribed, with sex as the preferred term for biological forms, and gender limited to its meanings involving behavioral, cultural, and psychological traits. In this dichotomy, the terms male and female relate only to biological forms (sex), while the terms masculine/ masculinity, feminine/femininity, woman/girl, and man/boy relate only to psychological and sociocultural traits (gender). This delineation also tends to be observed in technical and medical contexts, with the term sex referring to biological forms in such phrases as sex hormones, sex organs, and biological sex. But in nonmedical and nontechnical contexts, there is no clear delineation, and the status of the words remains complicated. Often when comparisons explicitly between male and female people are made, we see the term gender employed, with that term dominating in such collocations as gender differences, gender gap, gender equality, gender bias, and gender relations. It is likely that gender is applied in such contexts because of its psychological and sociocultural meanings, the word's duality making it dually useful. The fact remains that it is often applied in such cases against the prescribed use.

Usage of sex and gender is by no means settled. For example, while discrimination was far more often paired with sex from the 1960s through the 20th century and into the 21st, the phrase gender discrimination has been steadily increasing in use since the 1980s and is on track to become the dominant collocation. Currently both terms are sometimes employed with their intended synonymy made explicit: sex/gender discrimination, gender (sex) discrimination.

Infer vs. Imply: Usage Guide

Sir Thomas More is the first writer known to have used both infer and imply in their approved senses in 1528 (with infer meaning “to deduce from facts” and imply meaning “to hint at”). He is also the first to have used infer in a sense close in meaning to imply (1533). Both of these uses of infer coexisted without comment until sometime around the end of World War I. Since then, the “indicate” and “hint or suggest” meanings of infer have been frequently condemned as an undesirable blurring of a useful distinction. The actual blurring has been done by the commentators. The “indicate” sense of infer, descended from More’s use of 1533, does not occur with a personal subject. When objections arose, they were to a use with a personal subject (which is now considered a use of the “suggest, hint” sense of infer). Since dictionaries did not recognize this use specifically, the objectors assumed that the “indicate” sense was the one they found illogical, even though it had been in respectable use for four centuries. The actual usage condemned was a spoken one never used in logical discourse. At present the condemned “suggest, hint” sense is found in print chiefly in letters to the editor and other informal prose, not in serious intellectual writing. The controversy over the “suggest, hint” sense has apparently reduced the frequency with which the “indicate” sense of infer is used.

Developing and Maintaining Romantic

Relationships Again, I don't know exact verses but, I remember reading Jesus said, 'I did not come to change the laws of God, but to show men how to live by them.' (Do you know the verse in King James Bible,) This to me translates to show by example. I try diligently to show by example, or as I say, "Do your 1 percent." But we'll get to that later. Let us see what else? I have four kids.

My oldest daughter: I only found out about spring of 2014. Her mother thought it best to keep her from me for over 20 years. (Guess how she found me?) Yep, you guessed it Facebook, bringing families and nations together! She wants our story on Maury Povich, just being honest with you.

My son: unfortunately, is part of the new generation of a split modern dysfunctional family, fighting to change and get the family back to what really matters. He and his x-wife are starting to see the cards and handkerchiefs in the sleeve of our master magician.

I have two daughters by my second wife, technically they are stepdaughters. No, they do not call me dad or daddy or whatever may be sufficed. Yes. I would love to be called that, but anyone who is in the 'step parent' situation and truly sees the children of a woman or man that you love as your own; prays that one day you will be able to know they feel you did okay by them. I am very blessed to know the answer; loud and clear.

- You know when you have to reprimand your children verbally, there's always that one relative over that finds it extremely important to reminisce about the old times and what you used to do? (Do you have one?) Well yes, I too have had to deal with it and certain cousins, (you know who you are. LOVE YOU! Lol) this was my response, "Yes and it was just as stupid then as it is now, what's your point? So, one or two stupid things out of many:

- When I was fourteen I was given a plaque from Cleveland Heights Library on Lee Rd., for reading every book in the library. Back then you had to sign a card to take books out. My name was on every card. I must be honest. It was no huge feat since I was on punish-ment nine months out of the year. You figure it out.
- My senior year, after taking the S.A.T and A.C.T test I was given certificates for having the highest S.A.T and A.C.T scores as an Afri-can American in the Nation.
- The same year I won the Martin Luther King Jr. Ebony poetry contest.
- Both awards were given to me by Dr. Nolan Ellison Dean Of Cuyahoga Community College; he presented them both to me. My mother proudly asked my father if he was going to join us the night of the ceremony. He sat in his usual corner chair; newspaper sprawled out across the floor for his whittling wood chips to fall, paused looked up at her and said. "For what? He should have been doing this kind of stuff all his life.
- That year I; with Dr. Ellison's tutelage, went to Tri-C.
- I started 'The Student Campus Patrol on all campuses after my girl-friend was raped in a parking garage and I found out about a lot more happening being right across from the projects.
- When I was in Houston, Texas; I drove a submersible, T top, Trans-Am under water during a flood, and made it safely home. On Golf bank St. and Antoine in 1990s
- I shutdown West 25th bridge, close to the West 25th and Lorain area, sitting on the hood of a car with a sawed-off shotgun,(I named her Sarah Jane) while a very close friend of mine, at the time pulled a few guys out of their cars, and beat them with a bat for messing with his family.

That's enough dirt for now on me. I hope you are realizing although I am touched (I don't need any help; thank you very much, lol) or rather I am blessed; I am a man, not impervious to any other human flaws and frailties. So, to surmise any other dirt that may come out... If you have dreamed it, fan-tasized about it, or thought it deprave, I have either done it or I know someone who has. Salute!

So, before you go and waste time; I was a terrible person at one time. I pay penance every day for I will never know if I have done enough to be forgiven. Not until I check in at the gate with the Book of LIFE.

I am nobody special, I don't have any of those initials behind my name like BA an MBA and all those other acronyms. I do have some of the psychosis ac-ronyms most of us have after our names now. (Isn't it hilarious how some of us didn't know we had mental issues until we were told we did? What is not even remotely funny; at least to me, is that children under 5 years old have psychiatrist appointments! Pose children have to take some of the same pills I do. What do you think?) True story, I have had a mother in her 20's tell me her 1-year-old baby had 'Abandonment Issues'. I kindly smiled to her and responded, "That baby doesn't even know what those words mean. He only cares about which side his next meal is coming from; either the left or the right!" As far as the psychosis epidemic I fear we have been distracted to believe, I have post-traumatic stress syndrome. (I know like who doesn't, right?

Now stop and think about 'psychotic epidemic'? Huh, right, nudge nudge.) But in my files, mine is compared to a Vietnam Veteran who had done 3 tours in the war. See how screwed up I am? But my father always reminded me there is always someone greater and someone lesser than you, those that will have it better than you and those that have it worse, much, much, worse.

Mental-Health-Conditions

The National Alliance on Mental Illness

(<https://www.nami.org/About-Mental-Illness/Mental-Health-Conditions>)

NAMI recognizes that other organizations have drawn distinctions between what diagnoses are considered “mental health conditions” as opposed to “mental illnesses.” We intentionally use the terms “mental health conditions” and “mental illness/es” interchangeably.

A mental illness is a condition that affects a person’s thinking, feeling, behavior or mood. These conditions deeply impact day-to-day living and may also affect the ability to relate to others. If you have—or think you might have—a mental illness, the first thing you must know is that you are not alone. Mental health conditions are far more common than you think, mainly because people don’t like to, or are scared to, talk about them. However:

- 1 in 5 U.S. adults experience mental illness each year
- 1 in 25 U.S. adults experience serious mental illness each year
- 1 in 6 U.S. youth aged 6-17 experience a mental health disorder each year
- 50% of all lifetime mental illness begins by age 14, and 75% by age 24

A mental health condition isn’t the result of one event. Research suggests multiple, linking causes. Genetics, environment and lifestyle influence whether someone develops a mental health condition. A stressful job or home life makes some people more susceptible, as do traumatic life events. Biochemical processes and circuits and basic brain structure may play a role, too.

None of this means that you’re broken or that you, or your family, did something “wrong.” Mental illness is no one’s fault. And for many people, recovery—including meaningful roles in social life, school and work—is possible, especially when you start treatment early and play a strong role in your own recovery process.

Anxiety Disorders

Everyone can experience anxiety, but when symptoms are overwhelming and constant—often impacting everyday living—it may be an anxiety disorder.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)

ADHD is a developmental disorder defined by inattention (trouble staying on task, listening); disorganization (losing materials); and hyperactivity-impulsivity (fidgeting, difficulty staying seated or waiting).

Bipolar Disorder

Bipolar disorder causes dramatic shifts in a person's mood, energy and ability to think clearly. Individuals with this disorder experience extreme high and low moods, known as mania and depression. Some people can be symptom-free for many years between episodes.

Borderline Personality Disorder

BPD is characterized by a pattern of instability in emotions (commonly referred to as dysregulation), interpersonal relationships and self-image. Individuals with BPD can also struggle with impulsivity and self-harm.

New Term: Hereditary Psychosis?

We have serious stress in our lives, and everyone pretty much has some form of let-ters behind their name, referring to some type of psychosis, or mental illness. What we failed to realize, is that these issues have been around for a much longer time, than we wish to admit. Many of the practices we unconsciously follow, have been handed down. The ones we are consciously aware of; we have a false sense of security that we are in control. Henceforth, hereditary psychosis, and because of the fact that we cannot truthfully, dictate how a person reacts to a situation, the reaction

Fascia:

A fascia (/ˈfæʃ(i)ə/; plural fasciae; adjective fascial; from Latin: “band”) is a band or sheet of connective tissue, primarily collagen, beneath the skin that attaches to, stabilizes, encloses, and separates muscles and other inter-nal organs. Fascia is classified by layer, as superficial fascia, deep fascia, and visceral or parietal fascia, or by its function and anatomical location.

Abstract

The idea that tissues may possess some sort of memory is a controversial topic in manual medicine, calling for research and clinical exploration. Many bodyworkers, at some point in their practice, have experienced phenomena that may be interpreted as representing a release of memo-ry traces when working on dysfunctional tissues. This feeling may have been accompanied by some type of sensory experience, for the therapist and/or the patient. In some cases, early traumatic experiences may be re-called. When this happens, the potency of the memory may be erased or eased, along with restoration of tissue function. Hence the questions: can memories be held in the fascia? And: are these memories accessible during manual fascial work? Modern research has proposed a variety of different interpretations as to how memory might be stored in soft tissues, possi-bly involving other forms of information storage not exclusively processed neurologically (Box 1).

So, my parents had the usual dysfunctional family issues. We have now accepted and become standard with just being a family. However, back then “what goes on in this house stays in this house”. (Sound familiar? If not, truly consider yourself blessed, because anyone who does, well; the list of depravities that go with that phrase is massive, especially now! Do you have a story?) This is what I don’t get, and what I am finding is also a part of the foundation of my being. How can you know you have had something done to you; that you don’t like, turn around and do it to someone else? I felt I had to take it from my parents, I would not stand for it; no, that’s not strong enough; I would not tolerate it, from anyone else, period!

One of the things that I have found, is that we all try to manage different situations, however, if we have had bad experiences in dealing with those situations, oftentimes we transfer, or continue the cycle of how we deal with bad situations. I still believe that it was a difference between the Alpha and the Omega; however, it is high time that we truly define the roles, not the place, or position, but the roles that we play with each other in our everyday lives.

I understand when mentioning the Willie Lynch letters, it causes automatic indignation. However, when I read them, I saw the world. I saw a scientific formula if you will. I managed to take out the race, because I believe strongly that every race has subjugated their own people. Let's be honest there is no race that I can think of, in my humble opinion, that is not guilty of subjugation of their own people, with the hierarchy of rich and poor within the same race.

'We live in the "mass murder century." More than 50 million people have been systematically murdered by government decrees, enacted by soldiers and civilian forces willing to carry out the kill orders. Beginning in 1915, Ottoman Turks slaughtered 1.5 million Armenians. The mid-20th century saw the Nazis liquidated at least 6 million Jews, 3 million Soviet POW's, 2 million Poles, and hundreds of thousands of 'undesirable' peoples. As Stalin's Soviet empire murdered, 20 million Russians, Mao Ze-dong's government policies resulted in an even greater number of deaths, 30 million of the country's own citizens. The Communist Khmer Rouge regime killed off 1.7 million people of its own nation in Cambodia. Sadd-am Hussein's Ba'ath Party is accused of killing 100,000 Kurds in Iraq. In 2006, genocide has erupted in Sudan's Darfur region, which most of the world has conveniently ignored.'

And We Men Do Not Monopolize Cruelty and Genocide

'The systematic slaughter of Tutsis by their former neighbors, the Hutus, spread throughout the country in a few months during the spring of 1994 as death squads killed thousands of innocent men, women, and children with machetes and nail studded clubs. A report by the United Nations estimates that between 800,000 and a million Rwandans were murdered in about 3 months' time, making the massacre the most ferocious in recorded history. 3/4 of the entire Tutsis population were exterminated.

'Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, a Tutsi and former social worker who lectured on women's empowerment, was the only hope of this village. That hope was instantly shattered. Pauline supervised a terrible trap, promising the people that the Red Cross would provide food and shelter in the local stadium; In reality, armed Hutu thugs (the Interahamwe) were awaiting their arrival, eventually murdering most of the innocent sanctuary seekers. They were machine gunned, grenades were thrown into the unsuspecting throngs, and survivors were sliced apart with machetes.

Pauline gave the order that, "Before you kill the women you need to rape them." She ordered another group of these thugs to burn alive a group of 70 women and girls they were guarding and provided them with gasoline from her car to do so. Again, she invited the men to rape their victims before killing them. One of the young men told a translator that they couldn't rape them because, "we had been killing all day and we were tired. We just put the gasoline in bottles and scattered it among the women, then started burning." Phillip Zimbardo, The Lucifer Effect

I have heard many of the rationalizations or reason to dismiss the validity of the Willie Lynch letters. They dispute the language and time period of cer-tain phrases. I say the illusionist is at work. (How about you, what do you think?) I will not argue the science of language and its validity in history; on the contrary. However, I think you are losing site of the point of the letter. Which is a written schematic of psychological, spiritual, and physical domi-nance over a race. To be honest even the targeting of only one race is ingenious because we all fall into one of the methods written. You see the illusionist has gotten other races outside of African American, to say it doesn't pertain to them, "and to be honest they're always 'complaining' about something. It's kind of like the boy who cried wolf. So, I will even list the website where they choose to argue over apples and oranges in my opinion. (

Main article: William Lynch (Lynch law)

Forewords attached to some online versions of the speech credit the narrator's name as the source of the terms "lynching" and "Lynch law", despite the narrator specifically advocating against lynching.^{[1][5]} A man named William Lynch did indeed claim to have originated the term during the American Revolutionary War, but he was born in 1742, thirty years after the alleged delivery of the speech.^{[11][12]} A document published in the Southern Literary Messenger in 1836 that proposed William Lynch as the originator of "lynch law" may have been a hoax perpetrated by Ed-gar Allan Poe.^[13] A better documented early use of the term "Lynch law" comes from Charles Lynch, a Virginia justice of the peace and militia offi-cer during the American Revolution.^[11]

The people of the world (and how they're counted)

Every country on earth, no matter how isolated, has some ethnic diversity; the mingling of people from more than one ethnic group. We usually talk about diversity in regards to how the majority of the country treats ethnic minorities. Lots of countries find it useful to keep track of what major groups make up their population.

Here are some statistics about what the different ethnic groups are in countries around the world. You'll notice that the ethnic identities listed for each country can seem very different--Bahrain only lists Bahrainis and non-Bahrainis. The groups they track are determined by each country, so the standards can vary. Here are the results for each country presented alphabetically, taken from censuses and official surveys.

With that, I share with you the version of Willie Lynch letters edited. The severity of the language used in its original context was necessary to under-stand the severity of how African Americans were manipulated, degraded etc. The unedited, derogatory version is at the back of the book.

Note: Bloodline deconstruction in Scottish and British history referred to in the movie Braveheart, Braveheart Trailer – 1995 HQ(<https://youtu.be/1cnoM8EiGGU>) A Scottish Xbox 360 family member actually in Scotland, and by Braveheart being one of my favorite movies, I asked him about its authenticity. I was saddened to hear how misguided the movie was in a lot of facts; however, British rule and bloodline deconstruction referring to the wedding night of a Scottish couple, did allow the Lord of the territory being British the right to spend the first night, with the bride. But this can be traced even further back to the Roman Dynasty.

Self-Induced Racism

On a cold Sunday morning, October 26th, 2014, I went out to Amish country on 702 for an auction. The auction starts roughly at about 8:00 o'clock in the morning, and went till 6:00 o'clock that evening. If you've ever been to an auc-tion you have a number, that identifies you as the buyer, than you can bid on the items of the day. At the end of the day you settle your bill. Again, I remind you, this is out in Amish country. At the end of the day when it came time for me to settle on my bill, I stood in line and waited to approach the table inside a little shed.

After giving my number, and having all of the items, under my number pulled, I was given my total. I went and took my credit card out, and gave it to the young lady to process. It did not go through. I did the typical taking the card and wiping the strip, making sure everything was okay with it, and handed it back to her. She took the card with a smile and ran it again. It did not go through. Now my mind is racing. I ask the young lady to please hand back my card so I can call my bank. I step out of line and place my call. In *my mind I perceived, or assumed that they are thinking the most vile racial slurs imaginable. I finally connect, and after being reassured the account was fine I stepped back in line. When my turn came, I explained about the call, and that the bank assures me it should work, She takes the card, begins processing it and... it goes through. She gathers my receipts, and my card and hands them back to me saying as kindly as possible, 'yes we have terrible reception out here. We often have difficulty with processing credit cards.' I took myself through 30 minutes of racially motivated stress. For no reason. I had a wonderful Sunday. (Be honest, have you ever gone through a similar situation where a person's look, or action, or comment made you perceive it in a negative way, but you personally had no verbal communication with them?)

I strongly believe that mental slavery is the worst kind of slavery, giving the illusion of freedom. Mental Slavery makes you trust, love and even defend your oppressor. You turn on those who are trying to help you see it for yourself and trying to free you

Let's Lighten the mood with a joke:

There is a beautiful young lady, sitting at a local social establishment with her Shirley Temple. As she begins to take a sip of her Shirley Temple, she eyes across the room, the man of her dreams at the door. She had turned down so many men during the night, and finally her Knight in shining armor was there. As she began to drink, her mind drifted, thinking of their first date. The conversation we would have, and how we would find out we have so much in common. After dinner and little dancing, we take a walk on the beach. My hair blows in his convertible, as he takes me home. At the door, I gently kiss him goodnight, and he gently kisses me back, and hugs me and walks away.

After a year or so of growing closer together, he proposes to me, at our favor-ite restaurant. Down on one knee, in front of everyone! The rest of the customers began to chant, "Say yes, say yes," and of course I do. We have a perfect wedding, and finally he carries me across the threshold, of our four-bedroom condominium. A few years go by, and we have two wonderful children, Nicholas and Janet. Oh, and let's not forget a Pomeranian Leonardo. Then as some time goes by, he starts working late. He begins to miss family events, like Janet's play and her recital. Nicholas's 3 football games, and my parents 45th anniversary. Then one night of him, having to work late, I decide to be romantic, and take Chinese food to him, working at the office. I open the door; and there he is with his new young secretary, sitting on his lap.

Just then she is brought back to reality, with the sound of a deep husky voice. "Hey beautiful lady, how are you this evening. I thought I felt a spark when our eyes connected from across the room. Can I buy you another drink?" She jumps up, throws her drink in his face, and says, "How could you do this to us? The children will be crushed.", and storms out.

sub·ser·vi·ent | \ səb-'sər-vē-ənt \

Definition of subservient

- 1: useful in an inferior capacity :
- SUBORDINATE 2: serving to promote some end
- 3: obsequiously submissive : TRUCKLING

How Should You Use subservient?

Since sub- means “below”, it emphasizes the lower position of the person in the subservient one. Soldiers of a given rank are always subservient to those of a higher rank; this subservience is symbolized by the requirement that they salute their superior at every opportunity. Women have often been forced into subservient relationships with men. A small nation may feel subservient to its more powerful neighbor, obliged to obey even when it doesn’t want to. So subservience usually brings with it a good dose of resentment.

Examples of subservient in a Sentence

Henson and Stowe did become close friends, and Stowe herself drew direct parallels between Uncle Tom and Josiah Henson. Sadder still, the term “Uncle Tom” has since taken on negative, minstrel-show connotations of subservient blacks kowtowing to whites, which is unfortunate, because it undermines the triumph that was Josiah Henson’s life. He was no caricature, and his achievements were real.— Will Ferguson, Beauty Tips From Moose Jaw, 2004 Sally Boysen, a psychologist at Ohio State University, probed the degree to which a chimp’s ability to reason is subservient to the animal’s desires.— Eugene Linden, Time, 6 Sept. 1999 That’s why many believe that I have the right to preach but not to pastor. For a woman to be a pastor would mean that men would have to submit and be subservient to a woman.— Chryll Crews, Ms., January/February 1998 As for a “European Europe,” allied with but not subservient to the United States, providing for its own defense and diplomacy and practicing detente with Moscow, de Gaulle did not achieve it in his lifetime, but there was at least a beginning.— Stanley Hoffmann, New York Times Book Review, 20 Mar. 1983 She refused to take a subservient role in their marriage.

Recent Examples on the Web Critics of McCormack within the Nationals accused him of being too subservient to the dominant conservative Liberal Party.— Rod McGuirk, Star Tribune, 21 June 2021 For months until the coronavirus pandemic, America’s top officials crisscrossed the continent, arguing that the Chinese company is an espionage threat, sub-servient to its authoritarian government.— Drew Hinshaw, WSJ, 9 Apr. 2020 In the original painting, this young Black boy was shown in shackles, subservient to the university benefactors.

The Formula for Controlling A People

WILLIE LYNCH The Making of a Slave edited VFH

The original unedited version in the back of the book

This speech was delivered by Willie Lynch on the bank of the James River in the colony of Virginia in 1712. Lynch was a British subservient owner in the West Indies. He was invited to the colony of Virginia in 1712 to teach his methods to subservient owners there. The term “lynching” is derived from his last name.

Greetings

“Gentlemen. I greet you here on the bank of the James River in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and twelve. First, I shall thank you, the gentlemen of the Colony of Virginia, for bringing me here. I am here to help you solve some of your problems with subservient. Your invitation reached me on my modest containment in the West Indies, where I have experimented with some of the newest and still the oldest methods for control of subservient. Ancient Rome’s would envy us if my program is implemented. As our boat sailed south on the James River, named for our illustrious King, whose version of the Bible we Cherish, I saw enough to know that your problem is not unique. While Rome used cords of wood as crosses for standing human bodies along its highways in great numbers, you are here using the tree and the rope on occasions. I caught the whiff of a dead subservient hanging from a tree, a couple miles back. You are not only losing valuable stock by hangings, you are having uprisings, subservi-ent are running away, your crops are sometimes left in the fields too long for maximum profit, You suffer occasional fires, your animals are killed.

Gentlemen, you know what your problems are; I do not need to elaborate. I am not here to enumerate your problems; I am here to introduce you to a method of solving them. In my bag here, I HAVE A FULL PROOF METHOD FOR CONTROLLING YOUR SUBSERVIENT.

I guarantee every one of you that if installed correctly It WILL CON-TROL THE SUBSERVIENTS FOR AT LEAST 300 YEARS. My method is simple. Any member of your family or your overseer can use it. I HAVE OUTLINED A NUMBER OF DIFFERENCES AMONG THE SUBSERVIENT; AND I TAKE THESE DIFFERENCES AND MAKE THEM BIGGER. I USE FEAR, DISTRUST AND ENVY FOR CON-TROL PURPOSES. These methods have worked on my modest contain-ment in the West Indies and it will work throughout the South. Take this simple little list of differences and think about them. On top of my list is “AGE” but it’s there only because it starts with an “A.” The second is “COLOR” or shade, there is INTELLIGENCE, SIZE, SEX, SIZES OF CONTAINMENTS, status on containments, ATTITUDE of owners, whether the subservient live in the valley, on a hill, East, West, North, South, have fine hair, course hair, or is tall or short. Now that you have a list of differences, I shall give you an outline of action, but before that, I shall assure you that DISTRUST IS STRONGER THAN TRUST AND ENVY STRONGER THAN ADULATION, RESPECT OR ADMIRA-TION. The Subservient after receiving this indoctrination shall carry on and will become self-refueling and self-generating for HUNDREDS of years, maybe THOUSANDS. Don't forget you must pitch the OLD sub-servient Male vs. the YOUNG subservient Male, and the YOUNG sub-servient Male against the OLD subservient male. You must use the DARK skin subservient vs. the LIGHT skin subservient, and the LIGHT skin subservient vs. the DARK skin subservient. You must use the FEMALE vs. the MALE. And the MALE vs. the FEMALE. You must also have you servants and over-seers distrust all Subservient. But it is NECESSARY THAT YOUR SUBSERVIENTS TRUST AND DEPEND ON US. THEY MUST LOVE, RESPECT AND TRUST ONLY US. Gentlemen, these kits are your keys to control. Use them. Have your wives and chil-dren use them, never miss an opportunity. IF USED INTENSELY FOR ONE YEAR, THE SUBSERVIENTS THEMSELVES WILL REMAIN PERPETUALLY DISTRUSTFUL. Thank you gentlemen."

LET'S MAKE A SUBSERVIENT

It was the interest and business of subservient holders to study human nature, and the subservient nature in particular, with a view to practical results. I and many of them attained astonishing proficiency in this direction. They had to deal not with earth, wood and stone, but with men and by every regard they had for their own safety and prosperity they needed to know the material on which they were to work. Conscious of the in-justice and wrong they were every hour perpetuating and knowing what they themselves would do. Were they the victims of such wrongs? They were constantly looking for the first signs of the dreaded retribution. They watched, therefore with skilled and practiced eyes, and learned to read with great accuracy, the state of mind and heart of the subservient, through his sable face. Unusual sobriety, apparent abstractions, sullenness and in-difference indeed, any mood out of the common was afforded ground for suspicion and inquiry. Frederick Douglas's LET'S MAKE A SLAVE, is a study of the scientific process of man breaking and subservient making. It describes the rationale and results of the Anglo Saxons' ideas and methods of insuring the master/subservient relationship. LET'S MAKE A SLAVE "The Original and Development of a Social Being Called "The Subservient." Let us make a subservient. What do we need? First of all we need a subservient man, a pregnant subservient woman and her baby subservient boy.

Second, we will use the same basic principle that we use in breaking a horse, combined with some more sustaining factors. What we do with horses is that we break them from one form of life to another that is we reduce them from their natural state in nature. Whereas nature provides them with the natural capacity to take care of their offspring, we break that natural string of independence from them and thereby create a dependency status, so that we may be able to get from them useful production for our business and pleasure.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES FOR MAKING A SUBSERVIENT

For fear that our future generations may not understand the principles of breaking, both of the beasts together, the subservient and the horse. We understand that short range planning economics results in periodic economic chaos; so that to avoid turmoil in the economy, it requires us to have breath and depth in long range comprehensive planning, articulating both skill sharp perceptions. We lay down the following principles for long range comprehensive economic planning. Both horse and subservient is no good to the economy in the wild or natural state. Both must be BROKEN and TIED together for orderly production. For orderly future, special and particular attention must be paid to the FE-

MALE and the YOUNGEST offspring. Both must be CROSSBRED to produce a variety and division of labor. Both must be taught to respond to a peculiar new LANGUAGE. Psychological and physical instruction of CONTAINMENT must be created for both. We hold the six cardinal principles as truth to be self-evident, based upon the following the discourse concerning the economics of breaking and tying the horse and the subservient together, all inclusive of the six principles laid down about. NOTE: Neither principle alone will suffice for good economics. All principles must be employed for orderly good of the nation. Accordingly, both a wild horse and a wild or nature subservient is dangerous even if captured, for they will have the tendency to seek their customary freedom, and in doing so, might kill you in your sleep. You cannot rest. They sleep while you are awake, and are awake while you are asleep. They are DANGEROUS near the family house and it requires too much labor to watch them away from the house. Above all, you cannot get them to work in this natural state. Hence both the horse and the subservient must be broken; that is breaking them from one form of mental life to another. KEEP THE BODY TAKE THE MIND! In other words, break the will to resist. Now the breaking process is the same for both the horse and the subservient, only slightly varying in degrees. But as we said before, there is an art in long range economic planning. YOU MUST KEEP YOUR EYE AND THOUGHTS ON THE FEMALE and the OFFSPRING of the horse and the subservient. A brief discourse in offspring development will shed light on the key to sound economic principles. Pay little attention to the generation of original breaking, but CONCENTRATE ON FUTURE GENERATIONS. Therefore, if you break the FEMALE mother, she will BREAK the offspring in its early years of development and when the offspring is old enough to work, she will deliver it up to you, for her normal female protective tendencies will have been lost in the original breaking process. For example take the case of the wild stud horse, a female horse and an already infant horse and compare the break-ing process with two captured subservient males in their natural state, a pregnant subservient woman with her infant offspring. Take the stud horse, break him for limited containment.

Completely break the female horse until she becomes very gentle, where-as you or anybody can ride her in her comfort. Breed the mare and the stud until you have the desired offspring. Then you can turn the stud to freedom until you need him again. Train the female horse whereby she will eat out of your hand, and she will in turn train the infant horse to eat out of your hand also. When it comes to breaking the uncivilized subservient, use the same process, but vary the degree and step up the pressure, so as to do a complete reversal of the mind. Take the meanest and most restless subservient, strip him of his clothes in front of the remaining male subservient, the female, and the subservient infant, tar and feather him, tie each leg to a different horse faced in opposite directions, set him afire and beat both horses to pull him apart in front of the remaining subservient. The next step is to take a bull whip and beat the remaining subservient male to the point of death, in front of the female and the infant. Don't kill him, but PUT THE FEAR OF GOD IN HIM, for he can be useful for future breeding.

THE BREAKING PROCESS OF THE SUBSERVIENT WOMAN

Take the female and run a series of tests on her to see if she will submit to your desires willingly. Test her in every way because she is the most import-ant factor for good economics. If she shows any sign of resistance in sub-mitting completely to your will, do not hesitate to use the bull whip on her to extract that last bit of b%#@& out of her. Take care not to kill her, for in doing so, you spoil good economic. When in complete submission, she will train her off springs in the early years to submit to labor when they become of age. Understanding is the best thing. Therefore, we shall go deeper into this area of the subject matter concerning what we have produced here in this breaking process of the female subservient. We have reversed the relationship in her natural uncivilized state she would have a strong dependency on the uncivilized subservient male, and she would have a limited protective tendency toward her independent male offspring and would raise male off springs to be dependent like her. Nature had provided for this type of balance. We reversed nature by burning and pulling a civilized subservient apart and bull whipping the other to the point of death, all in her presence. By her being left alone, unprotected, with the MALE IMAGE DESTROYED, the ordeal caused her to move from her psychological dependent state to a frozen independent state. In this frozen psychological state of independence, she will raise her MALE and female offspring in reversed roles. For FEAR of the young males life she will psychologically train him to be MENTALLY WEAK and DEPENDENT, but PHYSICALLY STRONG. Because she has become psychologically independent, she will train her FEMALE off springs to be psychological independent. What have you got? You've got the SUBSERVIENT WOMAN OUT FRONT AND THE SUBSERVIENT MAN BEHIND AND SCARED This is a perfect situation of sound sleep and economic. Before the breaking process, we had to be alertly on guard at all times. Now we can sleep soundly, for out of frozen fear his woman stands guard for us.

He cannot get past her early subservient molding process. He is a good tool, now ready to be tied to the horse at a tender age. By the time a subservient boy reaches the age of sixteen, he is soundly broken in and ready for a long life of sound and efficient work and the reproduction of a unit of good labor force.

Continually through the breaking of uncivilized savage subservient, by throwing the subservient female savage into a frozen psychological state of independence, by killing of the protective male image, and by creating a submissive dependent mind of the subservient male subservient, we have created an orbiting cycle that turns on its own axis forever, unless a phenomenon occurs and re shifts the position of the male and female subservient. We show what we mean by example. Take the case of the two economic subservient units and examine them close

Earlier we talked about the noneconomic good of the horse and the subser-vient in their wild or natural state; we talked out the principle of breaking

THE SUBSERVIENT MARRIAGE UNIT

We breed two subservient males with two subservient females. Then we take the subservient male away from them and keep them moving and working. Say one subservient female bears a subservient female and the other bears a subservient male. Both subservient females being without influence of the subservient male image, frozen with an independent psychology, will raise their offspring into reverse positions. The one with the female offspring will teach her to be like herself, independent and negotiable (we negotiate with her, through her, by her, negotiates her at will). The one with the subservient male offspring, she being frozen subconscious fear for his life, will raise him to be mentally dependent and weak, but physically strong, in other words, body over mind. Now in a few years when these two offspring's become fertile for early reproduction we will mate and breed them and continue the cycle. That is good, sound, and long-range comprehensive planning.

WARNING: POSSIBLE INTERLOPING NEGATIVES

and tying them together for orderly production. Furthermore, we talked about paying particular attention to the female savage and her offspring for orderly future planning, then more recently we stated that, by revers-ing the positions of the male and female savages, we created an orbiting cycle that turns on its own axis forever unless a phenomenon occurred and resift and positions of the male and female savages. Our experts warned us about the possibility of this phenomenon occurring, for they say that the mind has a strong drive to correct and re-correct itself over a period of time if I can touch some substantial original historical base, and they advised us that the best way to deal with the phenomenon is to shave off the brute's mental history and create a multiplicity of phenomena of illu-sions, so that each illusion will twirl in its own orbit, something similar to floating balls in a vacuum. This creation of multiplicity of phenomena of illusions entails the principle of crossbreeding the subservient and the horse as we stated above, the purpose of which is to create a diversified di-vision of labor thereby creating different levels of labor and different values of illusion at each connecting level of labor. The results of which is the sev-erance of the points of original beginnings for each sphere illusion. Since we feel that the subject matter may get more complicated as we proceed in laying down our economic plan concerning the purpose, reason and effect of crossbreeding horses and subservient, we shall lay down the following definition terms for future generations.

Orbiting cycle means a thing turning in a given path. Axis means upon which or around which a body turns. Phenomenon means some-thing beyond ordinary conception and inspires awe and wonder. Multi-plicity means a great number. Cross breeding a horse means taking a horse and breeding it with an ass, and you get a dumb backward ass long headed mule that is not reproductive nor productive by itself. Crossbreeding subservient mean taking so many drops of good blood and putting them into as many subservient women as possible, varying the drops by the various tone that you want, and then letting them breed with each other until another circle of color appears as you desire. What this means is this; Put the subservient and the horse in a breeding pot, mix some assess and some good blood and what do you get? You got a multiplicity of colors of ass backward, unusual subservient, running, tied to a backward ass long head-ed mules, the one productive of itself, the other sterile. (The one constant, the other dying, we keep the subservient constant for we may replace the mules for another tool) both mule and subservient tied to each other, nei-ther knowing where the other came from and neither productive for itself, nor without each other.

CONTROLLED LANGUAGE

Crossbreeding completed, for further severance from their original begin-ning, WE MUST COMPLETELY ANNIHILATE THE MOTHER

TONGUE of both the new subservient and the new mule and institute a new language that involves the new life's work of both. You know language is a peculiar institution. It leads to the heart of a people. The more a foreigner knows about the language of another country the more he is able to move through all levels of that society. Therefore, if the foreigner is an enemy of the country, to the extent that he knows the body of the language, to that extent is the country vulnerable to attack or invasion of a foreign culture. For example, if you take a subservient, if you teach him all about your language, he will know all your secrets, and he is then no more a subservient, for you can't fool him any longer, and BEING A FOOL IS ONE OF THE BA-SIC INGREDIENTS OF AN INCIDENTS TO THE MAINTENANCE OF THE SUBSERVIENTRY SYSTEM. For example, if you told a subservient that he must perform in getting out “our crops” and he knows the language well, he would know that “our crops” didn’t mean “our crops” and the subservient system would break down, for he would relate on the basis of what “our crops” really meant. So, you have to be careful in setting up the new language for the subservient would soon be in your house, talking to you as “man to man” and that is death to our economic system. In addition, the definitions of words or terms are only a minute part of the process. Values are created and transported by communication through the body of the language. A total society has many interconnected value system. All the values in the society have bridges of language to connect them for orderly working in the society. But for these language bridges, these many value systems would sharply clash and cause internal strife or civil war, the degree of the conflict being determined by the magnitude of the issues or relative opposing strength in whatever form. For example, if you put a subservient in a hog pen and train him to live there and incorporate in him to value it as a way of life completely, the biggest problem you would have out of him is that he would worry you about provisions to keep the hog pen clean, or the same hog pen and make a slip and incorporate something in his language whereby he comes to value a house more than he does his hog pen, you got a problem. He will soon be in your house.

(Additional Note: = “Henty Berry, speaking in the Virginia House of Delegates in 1832, described the situation as it existed in many parts of the South at this time: “We have, as far as possible, closed every avenue by which light may enter their (the subservient) minds. If we could extinguish the capacity to see the light, our work would be complete; they would then be on a level with the beasts of the field and we should be safe. I am not certain that we would not do it if we could find out the process and that on the plea of necessity.” (From Brown America, The story of a New Race by Edwin R. Embree. 1931 The Viking Press.)

Many in my opin-ion are trying to express the senseless genocide that is occurring with black-on-black crime, hard times, and the mentality don't disrespect me. Truly, is someone accidentally stepping on your air force one or some other designer name brand tennis shoes worth taking a life and throwing yours away? I agree that disrespect should not be tolerated, and yet is it worth separating a person from their family, child, mother, significant other, when you can walk away and simply not deal with the person. It is sad that walking away and not allowing yourself to stoop to the same level of ignorance is portrayed as being weak or scared.

African history and African American history is not taught to our youths; they don't comprehend the pride in their own race. That Africans sailed the seas a thousand years before Christopher Columbus discovered for England the northern continent. They see and are taught about Caucasian Blue Blood and royalty, King James, Queen Elizabeth, Henry the eighth, heck Cleopatra is thought to be Caucasian because of Hollywood. Most Egyptian movies portray Egyptians as Caucasians. This has been go-ing on for a long time and the origin of black face.

Tales From the Hood 2 (2018) Official Trailer Debut HD [Exclusive] (<https://youtu.be/TXIAEyrH808>) makes a reference that after Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves, Caucasians figured out another way to market and profit from the persona of slavery with products that continued the image of ignorance and control.

Self-Hating Individual

The great individuals, like Emmitt Till, Malcom X, Martin Luther King Jr. etc. In Malcom X's speech "Who taught you to hate yourself " (https://youtu.be/sCSOiN_38nE), it truly makes you pause and ponder the idealism he speaks of. He is seen as hostile and angry, but I ask you could it not be looked at as very strong conviction? *(How do you see and feel about his speech? *I have studied both Malcolm x's and Dr. Martin Luther King jr. speeches, felt the rage, frustration, and understood the persecution. Both these great men speech of the same injustice and like most things having duality, felt the need for a different approach to the problems. Two different ends to the same means, two op-posite ends of the same spectrum, just as black and white are the two ends of the color spectrum. Neither of them being colors themselves by definition. *(Have we transcended or even evolved from the same mind set?)

Black Americans are incarcerated at nearly five times the rate of Whites, new report on state prisons finds

By Christina Carrega

An inmate at the Mule Creek State Prison exercises through pull-ups in an outside yard August 28, 2007, in Ione, California.

(CNN)Black Americans are incarcerated in state prisons at nearly five times the rate of White Americans, according to a new report by The Sentencing Project.

The report found that one in 81 Black adults per 100,000 people in the United States is serving time in a state prison, using data and projections from recent years from the US Census, the US Bureau of Justice Statistics and information provided directly from some states.

“Truly meaningful reforms to the criminal justice system cannot be accomplished without acknowledgement of its racist underpinnings,” Ashley Nellis, a senior research analyst for The Sentencing Project, wrote in the report. “Immediate and focused attention on the causes and consequences of racial disparities is required in order to eliminate them.”

The report released on Wednesday, found “staggering disproportion-alities” among the rates of incarceration of Blacks and Latinx people compared to Whites. In 12 states, more than half of the prison population is Black. And Latinx individuals are incarcerated in state prisons at a rate that is 1.3 times the incarceration rate of Whites, according to the report.

The Sentencing Project found that Wisconsin leads the country with the highest rate of Black inmates. One in every 36 Black Wisconsinites are in prison, according to the report.

A separate analysis from The Prison Policy Initiative gave the state a failing grade for overcrowding their adult correctional facilities during the pandemic, and a 2013 study by the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee Employment and Training Institute found that half of the young Black men from Milwaukee County were in state prison.

Hawaii, the state with the lowest Black-to-White disparity, still imprisons Blacks at “more than two times the rate of Whites,” according to the report.

Nellis proposed three recommendations to address the racial disparities. Those recommendations include eliminating mandatory sentences for all crimes, requiring racial impact statements to calculate the impact of proposed crime legislation on different populations and repeal existing racially biased laws, and decriminalizing low-level drug offenses.

Largest Ethnic Groups And Nationalities In The United States

American people cite a variety of ethnic backgrounds.

The US is a multi-racial and multi-ethnic country. The state officially categorizes its population into six groups: white, African American, Na-tive American/Alaskan Native, Pacific Islander, Asian, and Native Ha-waiian. From those groups, Americans identify with ethnic groups that are even more specific. More Americans specify as German than any other ethnicity.

African American

A black, or African American person is defined by having total or partial black ancestry. Despite the commonly used term of “African-American”, many black Americans cite ancestry from other places across the globe like South America and the Caribbean. However, many people do have African heritage, as many enslaved people were forcibly taken over to North America by European settlers. Many of these people came from West and Central Africa.

The history of racial discrimination against black Americans runs deep. Racial discrimination against African Americans was legally outlawed following the influence of the Civil Rights Movement, though inequality still exists today. Today, African Americans constitute 12.3% of the total population.

English

Most of the Americans who cite English ancestry are found in north-western US. They largely came from the British Isles, including England, Wales, and Scotland. Today, people of English origin make up 12.6% of the American population.

Irish

Many people from Ireland migrated to the US in mid-1800's due to the Great Famine in Ireland. A large amount settled in the large cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Presently the ethnic group makes up 10.6% of the total population in the country.

Native Americans

Native Americans, which includes anybody with ancestry from North, Central or South America as well as Alaska, make up 1.6% of the US population. Prior to European colonization, Native Americans were the original residents of the present-day United States. Unfortunately, the arrival of Europeans meant new exposure to diseases, and often involve a violent outcome. The Native American population dwindled, and today the population group still disproportionately suffers from high poverty rates.

Mexicans

Mexicans have been immigrating to the US throughout the history of the country due to the proximity of the country to the US. The people of the Mexican ethnic group is majorly found in the southwestern borders of the US and constitute 10.9% of the population. The Mexicans also constitute 58.5% of the Latino/ Hispanic population of the country.

People in Jail and Prison in Spring 2021 Jacob Kang-Brown, Chase Montagnet, and Jasmine Heiss June 2021 When the COVID-19 pandemic was first detected in the United States, it was clear that the virus would cause widespread suffering and death among incarcerated people. Advocates were quick to call for prison and jail releases. However, a little more than a year later, decarceration appears to have stalled. After an unprecedented 14 percent drop in incarceration in the first half of 2020—from 2.1 million people to 1.8 million—incarceration declined only slightly from fall 2020 to spring 2021. Generally, states that started 2020 with higher incarceration rates made fewer efforts to reduce incarceration through spring 2021. This pattern speaks to the political, economic, and social entrenchment of mass incarceration. At the federal level, the number of people in civil custody for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) is less than one-third of the 2019 population, while the number of people detained for the U.S. Marshals Service (USMS) facing federal criminal charges reached an all-time high. Jail populations in rural counties dropped by 27 percent from 2019 through March 2021, the most of any region. The historic drop in the number of people incarcerated was neither substantial nor sustained enough to be an adequate response to the pandemic, and incarceration in the United States remains a global aberration. Figure 1 The number of people incarcerated in jails and prisons from 1980 to spring 2021 Recent evidence from the Bureau of Justice Statistics also shows that racial inequity worsened as jail populations declined through June 2020.¹ Vera Institute of Justice (Vera) researchers collected data on the number of people incarcerated throughout 2020 and into early 2021 to provide timely information about how incarceration is changing in the United States during the COVID-19

jail jurisdictions, 50 states, and the Federal Bureau of Prisons, the USMS, and ICE.

Private Prison Statistics Private prison facilities housed 18% of the federal prison population and 7% of state prisoners in 2016 (BJS, ACLU). There are 1.6 million prisoners in US prisons, with 92% housed in public prisons and 8% housed in private prisons (Reason Foundation). How Many Private Prisons are in the United States?

According to the Sentencing Project, the nation's highest number of in-mates ever are jailed in private prisons. Problems that exist within the system will only improve with policy changes at the Department of Justice. A good first step would be rolling back the 2017 legislation aimed at increasing the length of time a person can be charged for drug and immigration offenses.

Private prisons incarcerated 121,718 people in 2017, which is 8.2% of the total state and federal prison population. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics, there were 1,430,800 incarcerated people total in the US at year-end 2019.

The states with the highest populations of people incarcerated in private prisons, which housed more than 20% of their overall prison populations in 2019 (BJS), include:

- Montana
- New Mexico
- Tennessee
- Oklahoma
- Hawaii

Private Prison Statistics

- Private prison facilities housed 18% of the federal prison population and 7% of state prisoners in 2016 (BJS, ACLU).
- There are 1.6 million prisoners in US prisons, with 92% housed in public prisons and 8% housed in private prisons (Reason Foundation).

- The average cost of housing a medium security inmate in a public prison in 2010 was $48.42 compared to $53.02 in a private prison (Reason Foundation).
- 73% of detained immigrants were held in privately run facilities in 2017 (The Sentencing Project).
- An estimated 49% more violent incidents and guard assaults are reported in private prisons than public, and inmate on inmate assaults are said to occur 65% more in a private facility (US Department of Justice).
- In 2015, 67,442 prisoners in public prisons were held in solitary confinement, but private prisons don't have to report this information (The Marshall Project).
- The average length of time a prisoner served in a public prison is less than half that of the average prisoner in a private facility (BJS).
- The private sector has the highest population of inmates in drug treatment over the public sector, with 28% of the population in private prisons vs 14% in public prisons.
- Today, one in five people is locked up on drug-related charges (Prison Policy Initiative).
- The public sector requires an average of 58 more pre-service training for their new officers than private facilities offer new hires, and the private sector has employee turnover rates near three times that of the public sector (US Courts.gov).
- Some states incarcerate more of their prison population in private facilities while 23 states don't work with for-profit prisons at all. For example, New Mexico sends 40% of inmates into private facilities, but Texas has the largest private state prison population in the nation (The Sentencing Project).

- In 2015, the private prison powerhouses CCA and the GEO Group earned around $3.5 billion all together (Infogram) and over $4 billion in 2016 (Journalist's Resource).
- A psychiatrist who investigated a Mississippi private prison found that inmates often dropped between 10 and 60 pounds, as they were severely underfed (The Salt Lake Tribune).

- The Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) sends around 400,000 undocumented immigrants to be detained in a private facility each year, which is increasing the need for private systems (Truth Out).

Anger State

Anger, also known as wrath or rage, is an intense emotional state involving a strong uncomfortable and non-cooperative response to a perceived provocation, hurt or threat.^{[1][2]}

A person experiencing anger will often experience physical effects, such as increased heart rate, elevated blood pressure, and increased levels of adrenaline and noradrenaline.^[3] Some view anger as an emotion which triggers part of the fight or flight response.^[4] Anger becomes the predominant feeling behaviorally, cognitively, and physiologically when a person makes the conscious choice to take action to immediately stop the threatening behavior of another outside force.^[5] The English term originally comes from the term anger of Old Norse language.^[6]

Anger can have many physical and mental consequences. The external expression of anger can be found in facial expressions, body language, physiological responses, and at times public acts of aggression. Facial expressions can range from inward angling of the eyebrows to a full frown.

^[7] While most of those who experience anger explain its arousal as a result of “what has happened to them”, psychologists point out that an angry person can very well be mistaken because anger causes a loss in self-monitoring capacity and objective observability.^[8]

Modern psychologists view anger as a normal, natural, and mature emotion experienced by virtually all humans at times, and as something that has functional value for survival. Uncontrolled anger can, however, negatively affect personal or social well-being^{[8][9]} and negatively impact those around them. While many philosophers and writers have warned against the spontaneous and uncontrolled fits of anger, there has been disagreement over the intrinsic value of anger.^[10] The issue of dealing with anger has been written about since the times of the earliest philosophers, but modern psychologists, in contrast to earlier writers, have also pointed out the possible harmful effects of suppressing anger.^(<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)

History and Etymology for anger

Noun

Middle English anger, angre “distress, affliction, hostile attitude, strong displeasure,” borrowed from Old Norse angr “grief, vexation,” going back to Germanic angaza-*, from an Indo-European s-stem h₂emǵh-es-/h₂emǵh-os- (whence Latin angor “suffocation, anguish,” Sanskrit ámhaḥ “anxiety, trouble,” Avestan qzah-, derivatives of a verbal base h₂emǵh-* “constrict, narrow,” whence Latin angō, angere “to choke, cause pain to, afflict, vex,” Greek ánchō, ánchein “to squeeze, strangle,” Hittite ḫamanki “(s/he) ties, binds”; also from the base h₂emǵh-* an adjective derivative h₂emǵh-u-* “narrow,” whence Germanic angu-* (> ang-wu-*, angwja-, whence Old English enge “narrow,” ange “distressing,” Old Saxon & Old High German engi “narrow,” Old High German ango “anxious,” Old Norse pngr, pngr, Gothic aggwus), Old Irish cumung “narrow,” Welsh cyfyng, Old Church Slavonic qzŭkŭ, Polish wzski, Armenian an-juk (Slavic & Armenian with a velar suffix), Sanskrit amhúḥ

Can we take a moment here and talk about “By any means necessary”? This “slogan” had a meaning and a purpose. That if you are being mistreated you have the right to protect yourself. The right to own your own business.

The right to co-exist with your fellow being. These were and in some cases are still issues, and yet when it is referenced it means violence of some kind. (So how do you define mental slavery? Does it only apply to race? What about the mental slavery of an abused spouse, or child? What about the mental slavery of a bully victim?)

The Need to Discuss Black-on-Black Crime

(BARRY LATZER is an emeritus professor at John Jay College of Criminal Justice, CUNY. His most recent book is The Rise and Fall of Violent Crime in America. His history of violent crime pre-1940, The Roots of Violent Crime in America: From the Gilded Age through the Great Depression, will be published in 2021.)

In his article “The Need to Discuss Black-on-Black Crime” (<https://www.nationalreview.com/magazine/2019/12/22/the-need-to-dis-cuss-black-on-black-crime/>), at the very beginning an image of violence and murders. In Savannah, Ga., from 1896 to 1903, re-

What comes to my mind is “He or they disrespected me.” Personally, I strongly believe to get respect you have to give respect and in most cases there is NO RESPECT for human life. There are many reasons given for Black-on-Black crime such as slavery, but if that is the case why were there not more crimes committed against the Caucasian oppressor. After being freed the Black-on-Black crime escalated homicide-victimization rates for black men were 3.9 times the national average and that 52 percent of all known homicide victims were black (2017 data). Where the homicide victim was African American, the suspected killer also was 88 percent of the time. Let’s go back in the records. From 1976 to 2005, 94 percent of African Americans victims were killed by other African Americans. Black-on-black killing has been the norm for well over a century. The late 19th century, African Americans homicide was overwhelmingly carried out by other African Americans.

searchers found 91 homicides in which the race of both the offender and the victim were known. Sixty-eight of the victims (75 percent of all those killed) were Black, and 61 African Americans, or 90 percent of the alleged perpetrators, were arrested for these murders.

In the North, where the African Americans population was small prior to the migration, the pattern of black-on-black killing was the norm. In Philadelphia, from 1839 to 1901, two-thirds of the homicide indictments of African Americans were for killing other persons of color.

In the 20th century, the number of African Americans victims escalated while the killers remained overwhelmingly African American. In Memphis from 1920 to 1925, where African Americans were 38 percent of the population, Black-on-Black killings were two-thirds of all murders in the city (in which race was known).

An examination of coroner's files uncovered 500 homicide victims in Birmingham, Ala., between 1937 and 1944. The city's population was roughly 40 percent African American, but 85 percent of both the killers (418) and the killed (427) were African American.

In the 1940s, when the African Americans migration resumed after a hiatus during the Great Depression, more northern cities began to reflect the increased African American violence. In Cleveland, which was 16 per-cent Black in the 40s, African Americans were the victims in 71 percent of the felonious homicide cases from 1947 to 1953. Whites were accused in six of the cases; Black people, in 320.

In the contemporary period, from 1976 to 2014, it is estimated that 198,288 African Americans died nationwide at the hands of African Americans killers. That's 5,218 deaths per year on average, roughly 19 times the annual number of deaths of African Americans in confrontations with po-lice. Now so-called arguments, conflicts, or "beefs" or "disrespect/dissing" disputes often involve long-standing rivalries between groups known as gangs, cliques, sets, crews, and so on. In 2017, 64 percent of all homicides where a motive was identified were the result of disputes of some kind, and with stronger data the percentage would probably be higher. Many of these beefs are connected to cycles of retaliatory violence that go back years, even generations, for to them it's all about retaliation or said "Payback".

So let's talk about black-on-black crime. In my humble opinion, it is prevalent because of the unspoken "snitch" rule, you take the law into your own hands. The snitch law also applies to the witness two-fold, retaliation, and lack of faith and trust in law enforcement and the judicial system.

African Americans had a fatality rate 2.8 times that of Whites while being more likely to be unarmed (14.8%) than White (9.4%) and Hispan-ic victims (5.8%) (DeGue et al., 2016).

It is well known that in the United States, African Americans people—males especially—have a higher disparity rate in interaction with the justice system. This is emboldened by the fact that of the 8% of American adults with felony convictions, Black men comprise 33% of them (Shannon et al., 2017). Police have killed a total of 1139 people in the United States according to Mapping Police Violence Organization Mapping Police Violence. African American 264, Asian 9, Hispanic 187, Indigenous or Native American 14, Pacific Islanders 8, Caucasian 480. (Gotcha) It is believed that African Americans are 2.9x more likely to be killed by police than Caucasians in America but what do statistics state? So why is this such a surprise? It's not news worthy to talk about Caucasian-on-Caucasian crime.

Fact check: Meme shows incorrect homicide stats by race (usatoday.com) A study in the American Journal of Preventative Medicine in 2016 examined all 812 fatalities that resulted from use of lethal force by on-duty law enforcement from 2009-2012 in 17 states. The study used National Violent Death Reporting System data.

The majority of victims were white people, at 52%, but "Black victims were over-represented (32.4%) relative to the U.S. population." The fatality rate was 2.8 times higher among Black victims than white victims.

Most victims were reported to be armed, at 83%, but Black victims were more likely to be unarmed, at 14.8%, than white victims, at 9.4%, the study found. In reality, rates of white-on-white and Black-on-Black homicides are similar and remain within 10 percentage points of each other, around 80% and 90%, respectively. Likewise, rates of Black-on-White and White-on-Black homicide remain within eight percentage points of each other, at around 16% and 8%. And police kill Black people at disproportionate and much higher rates than they kill their white counterparts.

To be brutally honest, Caucasian-on-Caucasian crime just isn't news worthy, except on Crime 360 channel and the plethora of similar programs. (Let's pause for a moment and if you are a person interested in such programing, how often are the homicide programs mixed with race? What about serial killers? What the predominant race of your "

officer was kind even sympathetic

But I must be honest, Cleveland had its own serial killer, Anthony Sowell, Af-rican American. Ironically, the only reason he was successful was because law enforcement saw it as "cleaning up the streets. Sarcasm, after all he was only killing crack heads, prostitutes and the likes. But that is true; his victims, (<https://www.oxygen.com/snapped/crime-news/cleveland-strangler-who-were-anthony-sowells-victims>

But I feel strongly obligated to look at this from the other end. First, not all law enforcement should be grouped as evil. Like anything else in life you have bad apples and to allow them to over shadow dedicated law enforcers is just wrong. Think to when you needed help and that to your plight. Second, look at today's overall attitude in African American communities. The youths disposition is F@#$ the law. The popular music is "gangster music" which glorifies the attitude of kill the gang in blue. How can you not expect law enforcement to be extremely apprehensive when you know you are one of the most disliked groups out there, dare I say even compared to the KKK. It is known, or so is said, you lose all race when you join the gang in blue, law enforcement, as depicted in Boyz in the Hood.

Honestly, it is believed in the African American communities that nothing will be done or corrected if I do stand up. That it's nobody's business. That in the revolv-ing door of the justice system the criminal will be back on the streets in no time, with one purpose in mind, find the snitch and retaliate. To be honest, we refuse to stand together as a unit, as 1 and take back our community. No one outside the race cares. But the article, 'Damn That Statue': Birmingham Proves Protests Work by Forcing Mayor to Confront Racism With 'Gangsta Shit' by Michael Harriet 6/3/2020 proves this wrong. (Protesters Mayor Destroy Confederate Statues in Bir-mingham (theroot.com) They decided to dress like street gang bangers and protest

There are the Confederate statues and Even though the city of Birmingham didn't even exist during the Civil War, the city has three monuments to slave owners, including two Confederate statues in Linn Park, where people gath-ered to protest police brutality. These statues represent to most the continuing attitude of racism and the constant reminder of slavery. (I would like to know how do you feel about such memorabilia? Do you feel maybe that the energy that is given to an inanimate object justifies it's destruction like the confederate flag, statues, etc. or are they pieces of nothing more than historical artifacts?)

Why We Never Talk About Black-on-Black Crime: An Answer to White America's Most Pressing Question

Michael Harriot 10/03/17 10:00AM

Filed to: BLACK ON BLACK CRIME

You've heard it before. It is the most frequent response to any accusation of police brutality. It is the repeated sleight of hand used to distract and drown out the voices of Black Lives Matter. It is an oft-used "alt-right" refrain and a sincere query from curious white questioners. It is the weapon of choice for the black practitioners of respectability politics and the favorite follow-up for people who frame their arguments with the preamble, "Not all white people..."

Why don't black people ever talk about black-on-black crime?

Instead of rejecting the entire notion as a method of deflection and privilege, we will attempt to formally dismiss the conversation forever by laying out the facts about why white America never hears us talk about black-on-black crime.

It's not a thing.

According to the FBI's uniform crime-reporting data for 2016, 90.1 per-cent of black victims of homicide were killed by other blacks, while 83.5 percent of whites were killed by other whites. While no life is inconsequential, the statistical evidence shows that—just as for blacks when it comes to black-on-black crime—whites are mostly victimized by other whites, with the vast majority of white murders committed by whites. This is because most victims of crime personally know their assailants. And while this is a truth across racial boundaries, no one ever talks about "white-on-white crime."

Furthermore, the Bureau of Justice Statistics' arrest data analysis tool shows that less than 1 percent of blacks overall (about 2 percent of black men) commit a violent crime in any given year. This means, factor-ing in interracial violent offenses, 99 percent of black men do not com-mit black-on-black crime.

- It has nothing to do with what we are talking about.

Imagine the head of Homeland Security walking up to the microphone to hold a press conference after a horrific terrorist attack, but when reporters start asking him about stopping terrorism and catching the culprits, he begins talking about texting and driving.

Sounds stupid, right?

But distracted driving kills more Americans each year than terrorism (and black-on-black crime), according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, so, according to the advocates of conversations about black-on-black crime, we should be discussing this first.

It is true that the vast majority of black murders are committed by black men, and we should do something to combat that statistic (we will get to that later, I promise), but that fact has nothing to do with state violence. When anyone interrupts a discussion about Black Lives Matter by bringing up black-on-black crime, it sounds as stupid as if a doctor addressed a cancerous brain tumor by asking about domestic violence, or if America's highest-ranking government official addressed white suprema-cist Nazi-palooza by talking about the so-called alt-left and the "very fine" tiki-torch carriers.

No one would ever be that stupid.

- We actually do talk about it... all the time.

It is perfectly understandable why white America assumes that black peo-ple don't talk about black-on-black crime. However, the reason they make this assumption dates to a quote found in recently uncovered papers from an unnamed woman archaeological and historical researchers refer to as “Grandmama”:

“It ain’t none of their damn business.”

The reality is, in neighborhoods and cities across America, there are countless organizations, activists and movements dedicated to curbing violence in black communities. The number of “Stop the Violence” marches dwarfs the demonstrations against police brutality. Unity rallies and peace picnics happen every day. Scared Straight programs for at-risk youths, gang counseling, neighborhood watches, intervention specialists, youth counselors, and too many other people and groups to name all lead the charge against crime and violence.

But those efforts don’t make the evening news because they aren’t as salacious as people blocking traffic and protesting; nor do they serve the preconceived white confirmation bias. Besides, there’s no way white people would know about this unless they stopped deflecting with trite questions and instead actually went into a minority neighborhood to selflessly join the effort to address the problems plaguing...

OK, you can stop laughing now.

- OK, let’s talk about black-on-black crime.

Both sociologists and criminologists agree that violent crime is a complex socio-economic phenomenon. Generally speaking, research shows that poor people commit the most crime: According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics, during the period from 2008 through 2012, “persons in poor households at or below the federal poverty level (FPL) (39.8 per 1,000) had more than double the rate of violent victimization as persons in high-income households (16.9 per 1,000)... The overall pattern of poor persons having the highest rates of violent victimization was consistent for both whites and blacks.”

Knowing this, the small difference in crime rates can easily be explained by income disparity. Maybe the question should be why are such a large percentage of black people poor?

As a matter of fact, if we are going to derail a conversation about black lives to talk about black-on-black crime, there are a few other questions we should answer first:

Why is the rate of violence actually higher among poor, urban whites? Why don't we ever discuss the economic impact of redlining and segregation on rates of violence?

If we are going to discuss the number of black people killed by blacks, should we discuss the number of white people murdered, raped and assaulted by fellow whites? Will this conversation include a debate about how blacks are arrested, incarcerated and sentenced for longer periods than whites for committing the same crimes?

Are you willing to detour into a brief explanation of why schools with large percentages of blacks are underfunded even though they have the same tax base and incomes? Do you have time to talk about the wage gap? Unemployment disparities?

All of these factors contribute to crime rates. So if you want to have a conversation about black-on-black crime, you should be careful, because, like most conversations about race, it will end up back in the same place:

White supremacy.

*A previous version of this article said that most murders were committed by whites. The FBI statistic referred to by that claim is only true in homicides by a single victim and a single offender.

The Hmong American community, power, privilege and a place in Asian America

KIMMY YAM

JUNE 8, 2020, 12:39 PM EDT

Former Minneapolis officer Tou Thao's role in the death of George Floyd has thrust the city's Hmong refugee population into the national discourse around race.

The actions of Thao, who is Hmong American, have propelled the community into the contentious discussion involving the relationship between the Asian American and the black communities. The national public spotlight and the feverish intercommunity dialogue follow the release of footage showing Thao standing aside as then-officer Derek Chauvin, who is white, dug his knee for eight minutes into the neck of Floyd, a black man. And it also highlights, specifically, where some Hmong Americans see themselves in the larger context of Asian America.

Minneapolis police officer Tou Thao. (Darnella Frazier / via Facebook) Thao, along with former officers Thomas Lane and J. Alexander Kueng, was charged with aiding and abetting murder Wednesday. Chauvin has been charged with second-degree murder after being elevated from third-degree. Some activists note that as the community grapples with Floyd's death and the demand for justice nationwide, the renewed spot-light on the group has also exposed a need for a more nuanced discussion about privilege among Asian Americans.

Many acknowledge there's a complicated space that Hmong Americans, who have themselves been historically confronted with trauma and provided little support, occupy in the race discussion. Fue Lee, a Hmong American state representative in Minnesota's House, told NBC Asian America that, as protests continue around the country, he's largely witnessed an outpouring of solidarity with black Americans from his community, himself being one of them. However, he's also seen a reluctance from some individuals to speak out. And he feels it's likely tied to their turbulent beginnings in the United States and a lack of access to adequate resources. "Some of our community members who may not have the experience of attaining higher education or [stepping] away from the place we grew up in, it's a little bit difficult to understand and see some of the privilege that we have," Lee said. Regardless, he's adamant that "we need to come to an understanding that we cannot support these anti-black narrative or ideas and thoughts in society if we really want to move forward as a community." The Twin Cities region in Minnesota, spanning both Minneapolis and St. Paul, remains home to the largest concentration of Hmong in the U.S. with an estimated 66,000 in the state. G. Thao, who was born in a refugee camp and grew up in North Minneapolis, explained that she, along with many other Hmong Americans, live and work alongside black communities. And it's been that way for decades. For the community member, conflict in the area was never about Hmong versus African Americans, but rather the northside versus "the rest of the world."

"I graduated from a North Minneapolis high school where the student makeup was almost entirely half black and half Hmong American," she said. "For so many young people from the northside, we push to try to make it to school every day and graduate so we can have a better life for our families. We share the collective struggle as young people trying to fight the odds stacked up against us because of where we come from."

Lee himself is familiar with such struggle. He also came to the U.S. as a refugee with his family, spending his early years on the northside of the city on welfare assistance and in public housing.

His parents, who have no formal education, weren't fluent in English and oftentimes he would find himself translating these complex social services to them as a 10-year-old. "I think that that opened my eyes up at an early age to some of the disparities and some of the barriers to why communities of color, especially black and brown communities, are facing poverty," the state representative said.

While images of wealthy, Ivy League graduates remain as the prevailing Asian trope, the Hmong American story proves the inaccuracies in the stereotype, demonstrating that the privileges that are enjoyed by some Asian American groups cannot be applied to all, Quyen Dinh, the executive director of the nonprofit Southeast Asia Resource Action Center, explained.

According to a report released by the organization, almost 60 percent of Hmong Americans are considered low-income, and more than 1 in 4 live in poverty. The statistics make them the demographic that fares the worst, in comparison to all racial groups, across multiple measures of income, the report said. When looking at the general population, the official poverty rate in 2018 was 11.8 percent.

Hmong Americans have public health insurance enrollment rates similar to African Americans at 39 percent and 38 percent, respectively. As for educational attainment, nearly 30 percent of Southeast Asian Americans haven't completed high school or passed the GED. It's a stark contrast from the national average at 13 percent.

Lee added that, especially since Hmong families and businesses are also confronting the ongoing racism aimed at Asian Americans as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, many feel that their long-standing issues have gone unnoticed. They feel unheard, he said, contributing to their resistance to joining the chorus of voices demanding racial justice.

“It’s more of... ‘we’re getting harassed, we’re getting attacked but you’re not saying anything. There’s no public outcry for that,’” Lee, who released a statement of support for the black community along with the other members of the Minnesota Asian Pacific Caucus, explained.

But the model minority myth has distracted from the challenges Hmong and other disenfranchised Asian American groups regularly encounter, Dinh said. Because of the stereotype, the need for more funding and resources to mend systemic issues that chip away at the community has been obscured.

“Every day, this stereotype has led to the real struggles that AAPI sub-groups face to go unaddressed and unsupported particularly for Southeast Asian American communities who arrived as refugees and were resettled in low-income, struggling neighborhoods, and who today continue to experience challenges with poverty, education and health,” she explained.

There has been significant support for the black community from many Hmong Americans, with coalitions like Hmong for Black Lives standing with their neighbors. However there is, admittedly, some anti-blackness in the community that can also be traced back to this very history of resettlement as well, experts point out.

The Hmong community, which hails primarily from Southeast Asia and parts of China, were largely recruited to fight on behalf of the U.S. in the “Secret War” in Laos in the 1960s. The move was part of the CIA’s attempt to stave off communist control in the country. When Laos fell to the Communist Pathet Lao in 1975 and U.S. troops pulled out, many Hmong became refugees, fleeing for Thailand and various refugee camps before eventually making it stateside.

“Hmong people did not come to the U.S. seeking the American dream that other immigrants talk about,” Annie Moua, a rising college freshman who also grew up in the area, said. “My parents came here because they were fleeing war and genocide. As a matter of fact, Hmong folks have been fleeing continuous genocides throughout centuries of our history.”

Moua, who serves as her family’s translator, explained that while many in America are promised freedom, many others like her own loved ones feel limited in their movement and speech in the country. “I’m still a kid in many ways and the burden is so great already,” she said. “This shows a great lack of resources within our community because knowing English is essential to access important resources in this country.” Kabzuag Vaj, founder of Freedom Inc., a nonprofit that aims to end violence toward minorities, women and the LGBTQ community, noted that because refugees moved into poorly funded neighborhoods that had already been inhabited by other black and brown communities, different groups were left to vie for resources, creating a strain among communities.

“There isn’t enough for all of you,” Vaj, who’s Hmong American, previously said.

While data on criminalization of Hmong Americans is scarce, Dinh explained that because refugees were resettled in these areas that dealt with histories of over policing, they also dealt with the impacts of police force, mass incarceration, and, eventually deportations, Dinh said. Research shows that the Asian American and Pacific Islander population saw a 250 percent growth during the 1990s.

What’s more, those from Southeast Asian American communities are three to four times more likely to be deported for old convictions, compared to other immigrant communities due to a pair of Clinton-era immigration legislation that further married the criminal legal and immigration systems together.

“In communities with large Hmong populations, Hmong youth are often also criminalized and discriminated by law enforcement for alleged gang affiliation,” she said.

However, Dinh underscored that while the Hmong community is dealing with their own battles with institutionalized racism and scarcity of resources, it doesn’t negate the very real issue that’s consuming national discussion: police brutality. Research shows that for black men, there is a 1 in 1,000 chance of being killed by police over the course of their lifetimes. However, when looking at the general population, the odds of being killed by cops is 1 in 2,000 for men and roughly 1 in 33,000 for women.

“Anti-blackness is a systemic issue that is not unique to the Hmong community or the AAPI community,” she said. “It is difficult for any community or individual living in a structurally inequitable society, inherited from a long history of entrenched racism and anti-Blackness, to do the work of confronting their own anti-blackness, separated from the everyday conditioning that is normalized for everyone.

G. Thao added that for Hmong Americans who have left their home-lands for a chance at safety, it’s imperative they demand justice for black communities. “At this moment, America still has a lot of work to do,” she said. “My family and I did not flee a country to survive genocide, only to watch this country do the same thing to our Black neighbors, friends, and colleagues. Our community has more in common with the black community than we share.”(<https://www.aol.com/hmong-american-community->

Emmitt Till

ArtikelZine: October 2011 by Unknown Author is licensed under CC BY-NC-ND

Different Day, Same Shit.: July 2013 by Unknown Author is licensed under CC BY-NC-ND

Emmett Louis Till (July 25, 1941–August 28, 1955) was a 14-year-old African American who was lynched in Mississippi in 1955, after being accused of offending a white woman in her family's grocery store. The brutality of his murder and the fact that his killers were acquitted drew attention to the long history of violent persecution of African Americans in the United States. Till posthumously became an icon of the civil rights movement.^[2] Till was born and raised in Chicago, Illinois.

During summer vacation in August 1955, he was visiting relatives near Money, Mississippi, in the Mississippi Delta region. He spoke to 21-year-old Carolyn Bryant, the white, married proprietor of a small grocery store there. Although what happened at the store is a matter of dispute, Till was accused of flirting with or whistling at Bryant. Till's interaction with Bryant, perhaps unwittingly, violated the unwritten code of behavior for a black male interacting with a white female in the Jim Crow-era South.^[3] Several nights after the incident in the store, Bryant's husband, Roy, and his half-brother J.W. Milam, who were armed, went to Till's great-uncle's house and abducted Emmett. They took him away and beat and mutilated him before shooting him in the head and sinking his body in the Tallahatchie River. Three days later, Till's body was discovered and retrieved from the river.

Till's body was returned to Chicago where his mother insisted on a public funeral service with an open casket, which was held at Roberts Temple Church of God in Christ.^[4] It was later said that "The open-coffin funeral held by Mamie Till Bradley exposed the world to more than her son Emmett Till's bloated, mutilated body. Her decision focused attention not only on U.S. racism and the barbarism of lynching but also on the limitations and vulnerabilities of American democracy".^[5] Tens of thousands attended his funeral or viewed his open casket, and images of his mutilated body were published in black-oriented magazines and newspapers, rallying popular black support and white sympathy across the U.S. Intense scrutiny was brought to bear on the lack of black civil rights in Mississippi, with newspapers around the U.S. critical of the state. Although local newspapers and law enforcement officials initially decried the violence against Till and called for justice, they responded to national criticism by defending Mississippians, temporarily giving support to the killers.

In September 1955, an all-white jury found Bryant and Milam not guilty of Till's murder. Protected against double jeopardy, the two men publicly admitted in a 1956 interview with Look magazine that they had killed Till. Till's murder was seen as a catalyst for the next phase of the civil rights movement. In December 1955, the Montgomery bus boycott began in Alabama and lasted more than a year, resulting eventually in a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that segregated buses were unconstitutional. According to historians, events surrounding Emmett Till's life and death continue to resonate. An Emmett Till Memorial Commission was established in the early 21st century. The Sumner County Courthouse was restored and includes the Emmett Till Interpretive Center. Fifty-one sites in the Mississippi Delta are memorialized as associated with Till.

The Emmett Till Antilynching Act, an American law which makes lynching a federal hate crime, was signed into law on March 29, 2022 by President Joe Biden.^[6]

Early childhood

Emmett Till was born in 1941 in Chicago; he was the son of Mamie Carthan (1921–2003) and Louis Till (1922–1945). Emmett's mother

Mamie was born in the small Delta town of Webb, Mississippi. The Delta region encompasses the large, multi-county area of northwestern Mississippi in the watershed of the Yazoo and Mississippi rivers. When Carthan was two years old, her family moved to Argo, Illinois, as part of the Great Migration of rural black families out of the South to the North to escape violence, lack of opportunity and unequal treatment under the law.^[7] Argo received so many Southern migrants that it was named “Little Mississippi”; Carthan’s mother’s home was often used by other recent migrants as a way station while they were trying to find jobs and housing.^[8]

Mississippi was the poorest state in the U.S. in the 1950s, and the Delta counties were some of the poorest in Mississippi.^[8] Mamie Carthan was born in Tallahatchie County, where the average income per white household in 1949 was $690 (equivalent to $7,000 in 2016). For black families, the figure was $462 (equivalent to $4,700 in 2016).^[9] In the rural areas, economic opportunities for blacks were almost nonexistent. They were mostly sharecroppers who lived on land owned by whites. Blacks had essentially been disenfranchised and excluded from voting and the political system since 1890, when the white-dominated legislature passed a new constitution that raised barriers to voter registration. Whites had also passed ordinances establishing racial segregation and Jim Crow laws.

Mamie largely raised Emmett with her mother; she and Louis Till separated in 1942 after she discovered that he had been unfaithful. Louis later abused her, choking her to unconsciousness, to which she responded by throwing scalding water at him.^[10] For violating court orders to stay away from Mamie, Louis Till was forced by a judge in 1943 to choose between jail or enlisting in the U.S. Army. In 1945, a few weeks before his son’s fourth birthday, he was executed for the murder of an Italian woman, and the rape of two others.^{[11][12]}

At the age of six, Emmett contracted polio, which left him with a persistent stutter.^[13] Mamie and Emmett moved to Detroit, where she met and married “Pink” Bradley in 1951. Emmett preferred living in Chicago, so he returned there to live with his grandmother; his mother and step-father rejoined him later that year. After the marriage dissolved in 1952, “Pink” Bradley returned alone to Detroit.^[14]

Mamie Till Bradley and Emmett lived together in a busy neighborhood in Chicago’s South Side, near distant relatives. She began working as a civilian clerk for the U.S. Air Force for a better salary. She recalled that Emmett was industrious enough to help with chores at home, although he sometimes got distracted. His mother remembered that he did not know his own limitations at times. Following the couple’s separation, Bradley visited Mamie and began threatening her. At eleven years old, Emmett, with a butcher knife in hand, told Bradley he would kill him if the man did not leave.^[16] Usually, however, Emmett was happy. He and his cousins and friends pulled pranks on each other (Emmett once took advantage of an extended car-ride when his friend fell asleep and placed the friend’s underwear on his head), and they also spent their free time in pickup baseball games. He was a natty dresser and was often the center of attention among his peers.^[17]

started pressing for equal rights in the South.^[22]

Plans to visit relatives in Mississippi

In 1955, Mamie Till Bradley's uncle, 64-year-old Mose Wright, visited her and Emmett in Chicago during the summer and told Emmett stories about living in the Mississippi Delta. Emmett wanted to see for himself. Wright planned to accompany Till with a cousin, Wheeler Parker; another cousin, Curtis Jones, would join them soon. Wright was a sharecropper and part-time minister who was often called "Preacher".^[18] He lived in Money, Mississippi, a small town in the Delta that consisted of three stores, a school, a post office, a cotton gin, and a few hundred residents, 8 miles (13 km) north of Greenwood. Before Emmett departed for the Delta, his mother cautioned him that Chicago and Mississippi were two different worlds, and he should know how to behave in front of whites in the South.^[19] He assured her he understood.^[20]

Statistics on lynchings began to be collected in 1882. Since that time, more than 500 African Americans have been killed by extrajudicial violence in Mississippi alone, and more than 3,000 across the South.^[21] Most of the incidents took place between 1876 and 1930; though far less common by the mid-1950s, these racially motivated murders still occurred. Throughout the South, whites publicly prohibited interracial relationships as a means to maintain white supremacy. Even the suggestion of sexual contact between black men and white women could carry severe penalties for black men. A resurgence of the enforcement of such Jim Crow laws was evident following World War II, when African-American veterans

Racial tensions increased after the United States Supreme Court's 1954 decision in Brown v. Board of Education to end segregation in public education, which it ruled as unconstitutional. Many segregationists believed the ruling would lead to interracial dating and marriage. Whites strongly resisted the court's ruling; one Virginia county closed all its public schools to prevent integration. Other jurisdictions simply ignored the ruling. In other ways, whites used stronger measures to keep blacks politically disenfranchised, which they had been since the turn of the century. Segregation in the South was used to constrain blacks forcefully from any semblance of social equality.^[23]

A week before Till arrived in Mississippi, a black activist named Lamar Smith was shot and killed in front of the county courthouse in Brookhaven for political organizing. Three white suspects were arrested, but they were soon released.^[24]

Till arrived in Money, Mississippi, on August 21, 1955. On August 24, he and cousin Curtis Jones skipped church where his great-uncle Mose Wright was preaching and joined some local boys as they went to Bryant's Grocery and Meat Market to buy candy. The teenagers were children of sharecroppers and had been picking cotton all day. The market mostly served the local sharecropper population and was owned by a white couple, 24-year-old Roy Bryant and his 21-year-old^[25] wife Carolyn. Carolyn was alone in the front of the store that day; her sister-in-law was in the rear of the store watching children. Jones left Till with the other boys while Jones played checkers across the street.

The facts of what took place in the store are still disputed. According to what Jones said at the time, the other boys reported that Till had a photograph of an integrated class at the school he attended in Chicago,^[note 1] and Till bragged to the boys that the white children in the picture were his friends. He pointed to a white girl in the picture, or referred to a picture of a white girl that had come with his new wallet,^[26] and said she was his girlfriend. According to Jones' account, one or more of the local boys then dared Till to speak to Bryant.^[25] However, writing a personal account of the incident in a book released in 2009, Till's cousin Simeon Wright, who was also present, disputed Jones' version of what happened on that day. According to Wright, Till did not have a photo of a white girl in his wallet and no one dared him to flirt with Bryant.^[27] Speaking in 2015, Wright said: "We didn't dare him to go to the store – the white folk said that. They said that he had pictures of his white girlfriend. There were no pictures. They never talked to me. They never interviewed me."^[28] The FBI report completed in 2006 notes: "[Curtis] Jones recanted his 1955 statements prior to his death and apologized to Mamie Till-Mobley".^[29]

According to some versions, including comments from some of the youngsters standing outside the store,^[30] Till may have wolf-whistled at Bryant. Till's cousin, Simeon Wright, who was with him at the store, stated that Till whistled at Bryant, saying, "I think [Emmett] wanted to get a laugh out of us or something," adding, "He was always joking around, and it was hard to tell when he was serious." Wright stated that following the whistle he became immediately alarmed. "Well, it scared us half to death," Wright recalled. "You know, we were almost in shock. We couldn't get out of there fast enough, because we had never heard of anything like that before. A black boy whistling at a white woman? In Mississippi? No." Wright stated "The Ku Klux Klan and night riders were part of our daily lives".^{[27][31]} Following his disappearance, a newspaper account stated that Till sometimes whistled to alleviate his stuttering.^[32] His speech was sometimes unclear; his mother said he had particular difficulty with pronouncing “b” sounds, and he may have whistled to overcome problems asking for bubble gum.^{[33][34][35]} She said that, to help with his articulation, she taught Till how to whistle softly to himself before pronouncing his words.^[34]

During the murder trial,^[note 2] Bryant testified that Till grabbed her hand while she was stocking candy and said, “How about a date, baby?”^[36]

^[37] She said that after she freed herself from his grasp, the young man followed her to the cash register,^[36] grabbed her waist and said, “What’s the matter baby, can’t you take it?”^{[36][note 3]} Bryant said she freed herself, and Till said, “You needn’t be afraid of me, baby”,^[36] used “one ‘unprintable’ word”^[36] and said “I’ve been with white women before.”^{[36][38]} Bryant also alleged that one of Till’s companions came into the store, grabbed him by the arm, and ordered him to leave.^[36] According to historian Timothy Tyson, Bryant admitted to him in a 2008 interview that her testimony during the trial that Till had made verbal and physical advances was false. ^{[39][40][41]} Bryant had testified Till grabbed her waist and uttered obscenities but later told Tyson “that part’s not true”.^[42] As for the rest of what happened, the 72-year-old stated she could not remember.^[43] Bryant is quoted by Tyson as saying “Nothing that boy did could ever justify what happened to him”.^[44] However, the tape recordings that Tyson made of the interviews with Bryant do not contain Bryant saying those things. In addition, the woman with Bryant at the interviews, “er daught’r-in-law, Marsha Bryant, says that Bryant never told Tyson that.^[45]

Decades later, Till’s cousin Simeon Wright also challenged the account given by Carolyn Bryant at the trial.^[46] Wright claims he entered the store “less than a minute” after Till was left inside alone with Bryant,^[46] and he saw no inappropriate behavior and heard “no lecherous conversation”.

^[46] Wright said Till “paid for his items and we left the store together”.

^[46] In their 2006 investigation of the cold case, the FBI noted that a second anonymous source, who was confirmed to have been in the store at the same time as Till and his cousin, supported Wright's account.^[26]

Author Devery Anderson writes that in an interview with the defense's attorneys, Bryant told a version of the initial encounter that included Till grabbing her hand and asking her for a date, but not Till approaching her and grabbing her waist, mentioning past relationships with white women, or having to be dragged unwillingly out of the store by another boy. Anderson further notes that many remarks prior to Till's kidnapping made by those involved indicate that it was his remarks to Bryant that angered his killers, rather than any alleged physical harassment. For instance, Mose Wright (a witness to the kidnapping) said that the kidnappers mentioned only "talk" at the store, and Sheriff George Smith only spoke of the arrested killers accusing Till of "ugly remarks". Anderson suggests that this evidence taken together implies that the more extreme details of Bryant's story were invented after the fact as part of the defense's legal strategy.^[47]

In any event, after Wright and Till left the store, Bryant went outside to retrieve a pistol from underneath the seat of a car. The teenagers saw her do this and left immediately.^[38] It was acknowledged that Till whistled while Bryant was going to her car.^[26] However, it is disputed whether Till whistled toward Bryant or toward a checkers game that was occurring just across the street.^[26]

One of the other boys ran across the street to tell Curtis Jones what happened in the store. When the older man with whom Jones was playing checkers heard the story, he urged the boys to leave quickly, fearing violence. Bryant told others of the events at the store, and the story spread quickly. Jones and Till declined to tell his great-uncle Mose Wright, fearing they would get in trouble.^[48] Till said he wanted to return home to Chicago. Carolyn's husband Roy Bryant was on an extended trip hauling shrimp to Texas and did not return home until August 27.^[49] Historian Timothy Tyson said an investigation by civil rights activists concluded Carolyn Bryant did not initially tell her husband Roy Bryant about the encounter with Till, and that Roy was told by a person who hung around down at their store.^[50] Roy was reportedly angry at his wife for not telling him. Carolyn Bryant told the FBI she didn't tell her husband because she feared he would beat Till up.^[51]

When Roy Bryant was informed of what had happened, he aggressively questioned several young Black men who entered the store. That evening, Bryant, with a Black man named J. W. Washington, approached a black teenager walking along a road. Bryant ordered Washington to seize the boy, put him in the back of a pickup truck, and took him to be identified by a companion of Carolyn's who had witnessed the episode with Till. Friends or parents vouched for the boy in Bryant's store, and Carolyn's companion denied that the boy Bryant and Washington seized was the one who had accosted her. Somehow, Bryant learned that the boy in the incident was from Chicago and was staying with Mose Wright.^[note 4] Several witnesses overheard Bryant and his 36-year-old half-brother, John William "J. W." Milam, discussing taking Till from his house.^[52]

In the early morning hours of August 28, 1955, sometime between 2 and 3:30 a.m., Bryant and Milam drove to Mose Wright's house. Milam was armed with a pistol and a flashlight. He asked Wright if he had three boys in the house from Chicago. Till was sharing a bed with another cousin; there were eight people in the small two-bedroom cabin. Milam asked Wright to take them to "the nigger who did the talking". Till's great-aunt offered the men money, but Milam refused as he rushed Emmett to put on his clothes. Mose Wright informed the men that Till was from up north and didn't know any better. Milam reportedly then asked, "How old are you, preacher?" to which Wright responded "64". Milam threatened that if Wright told anybody he wouldn't live to see 65. The men marched Till out to the truck. Wright said he heard them ask someone in the car if this was the boy, and heard someone say "yes". When asked if the voice was that of a man or a woman Wright said "it seemed like it was a lighter voice than a man's".^[53] In a 1956 interview with Look magazine, in which they confessed to the killing, Bryant and Milam said they would have brought

Till by the store in order to have Carolyn identify him, but stated they did not do so because they said Till admitted to being the one who had talked to her.^[37]

They tied up Till in the back of a green pickup truck and drove to-ward Money, Mississippi. According to some witnesses, they took Till back to Bryant's Groceries and recruited two black men. The men then drove to a barn in Drew. They pistol-whipped him on the way and reportedly knocked him unconscious. Willie Reed, who was 18 years old at the time, saw the truck passing by. Reed recalled seeing two white men in the front seat, and "two black males" in the back.^[54] Some have speculated that the two black men worked for Milam and were forced to help with the beat-ing, although they later denied being present.^{[55][56]}

Willie Reed said that while walking home, he heard the beating and crying from the barn. He told a neighbor and they both walked back up the road to a water well near the barn, where they were approached by Mi-lam. Milam asked if they heard anything. Reed responded "No". Others passed by the shed and heard yelling. A local neighbor also spotted "Too Tight" (Leroy Collins) at the back of the barn washing blood off the truck and noticed Till's boot. Milam explained he had killed a deer and that the boot belonged to him.^[citation needed]

Some have claimed that Till was shot and tossed over the Black Bayou Bridge in Glendora, Mississippi, near the Tallahatchie River.^[57] The group drove back to Roy Bryant's home in Money, where they reportedly burned Emmett's clothes.

Well, what else could we do? He was hopeless. I'm no bully; I never hurt a nigger in my life. I like niggers—in their place—I know how to work 'em. But I just decided it was time a few people got put on notice. As long as I live and can do anything about it, niggers are gonna stay in their place. Niggers ain't gonna vote where I live. If they did, they'd control the government. They ain't gonna go to school with my kids. And when a nigger gets close to mentioning sex with a white woman, he's tired o' livin'. I'm likely to kill him. Me and my folks fought for this country, and we got some rights. I stood there in that shed and listened to that nigger throw that poison at me, and I just made up my mind. 'Chicago boy,'

I said, 'I'm tired of 'em sending your kind down here to stir up trouble. Goddam you, I'm going to make an example of you—just so everybody can know how me and my folks stand.'

—J. W. Milam, Look magazine, 1956^[37]

In an interview with William Bradford Huie that was published in Look magazine in 1956, Bryant and Milam said that they intended to beat Till and throw him off an embankment into the river to frighten him. They told Huie that while they were beating Till, he called them bastards, declared he was as good as they, and said that he had sexual encounters with white women. They put Till in the back of their truck, drove to a cotton gin to take a 70-pound (32 kg) fan—the only time they admitted to being worried, thinking that by this time in early daylight they would be spotted and accused of stealing—and drove for several miles along the river looking for a place to dispose of Till. They shot him by the river and weighted his body with the fan.^{[37][note 5]}

Mose Wright stayed on his front porch for twenty minutes waiting for Till to return. He did not go back to bed.

He and another man went into Money, got gasoline, and drove around trying to find Till. Unsuccessful, they returned home by 8:00 am.^[58] After hearing from Wright that he would not call the police because he feared for his life, Curtis Jones placed a call to the Leflore County sheriff, and another to his mother in Chicago. Distraught, she called Emmett's mother Mamie Till Bradley.^[59] Wright and his wife Elizabeth drove to Sumner, where Elizabeth's brother contact-ed the sheriff.^[60]

Bryant and Milam were questioned by Leflore County sheriff, George Smith. They admitted they had taken the boy from his great-uncle's yard, but claimed they had released him the same night in front of Bryant's store. Bryant and Milam were arrested for kidnapping.^[61] Word got out that Till was miss-ing, and soon Medgar Evers, Mississippi state field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), and Amzie Moore, head of the Bolivar County chapter, became involved. They disguised themselves as cotton pickers and went into the cotton fields in search of any information that might help find Till.^[62]

Three days after his abduction and murder, Till's swollen and disfigured body was found by two boys who were fishing in the Tallahatchie River. His head was very badly mutilated, he had been shot above the right ear, an eye was dislodged from the socket, there was evidence that he had been beaten on the back and the hips, and his body weighted by a fan blade, which was fastened around his neck with barbed wire. He was nude, but wearing a silver ring with the initials "L. T." and "May 25, 1943" carved in it.^[63]^[note 6] His face was unrecognizable due to trauma and having been submerged in water. Mose Wright was called to the river to identify Till. The silver ring that Till was wearing was removed, returned to Wright, and next passed on to the district attorney as evidence.

Funeral and reaction

Mamie Till at Emmett's funeral

Although lynchings and racially motivated murders had occurred through-out the South for decades, the circumstances surrounding Till's murder and the timing acted as a catalyst to attract national attention to the case of a 14-year-old boy who had allegedly been killed for breaching a so-cial caste system. Till's murder aroused feelings about segregation, law en-forcement, relations between the North and South, the social status quo in Mississippi, the activities of the NAACP and the White Citizens' Coun-cils, and the Cold War, all of which were played out in a drama staged in newspapers all over the U.S. and abroad.^[64]

After Till went missing, a three-paragraph story was printed in the Green-wood Commonwealth and quickly picked up by other Mississippi newspapers. They reported on his death when the body was found. The next day, when a picture of him his mother had taken the previous Christmas showing them smiling together appeared in the Jackson Daily News and Vicks-burg Evening Post, editorials and letters to the editor were printed expressing shame at the people who had caused Till's death. One read, "Now is the time for every citizen who loves the state of Mississippi to 'Stand up and be counted' before hoodlum white trash brings us to destruction." The letter said that Negroes were not the downfall of Mississippi society, but whites like those in White Citizens' Councils that condoned violence.^[65]

Till's body was clothed, packed in lime, placed into a pine coffin and prepared for burial. It may have been embalmed while in Mississippi. Mamie Till Bradley demanded that the body be sent to Chicago; she later said that she worked to halt an immediate burial in Mississippi and called several local and state authorities in Illinois and Mississippi to make sure that her son was returned to Chicago.^[66] A doctor did not examine Till post-mortem.^[67]

Mississippi's governor, Hugh L. White, deplored the murder, asserting that local authorities should pursue a "vigorous prosecution". He sent a telegram to the national offices of the NAACP, promising a full investigation and assuring them "Mississippi does not condone such conduct". Delta residents, both black and white, also distanced themselves from Till's murder, finding the circumstances abhorrent. Local newspaper editorials denounced the murderers without question.^{[38][68]} Leflore County Deputy Sheriff John Cothran stated, "The white people around here feel pretty mad about the way that poor little boy was treated, and they won't stand for this."^[69]

Soon, however, discourse about Till's murder became more complex. Robert B. Patterson, executive secretary of the segregationist White Citizens' Council, used Till's death to claim that racial segregation policies were to provide for blacks' safety and that their efforts were being neutralized by the NAACP. In response, NAACP executive secretary Roy Wilkins characterized the incident as a lynching and said that Mississippi was trying to maintain white supremacy through murder. He said, "there is in the entire state no restraining influence of decency, not in the state capital, among the daily newspapers, the clergy, nor any segment of the so-called better citizens."^[70] Mamie Till Bradley told a reporter that she would seek legal aid to help law enforcement find her son's killers and that the State of Mississippi should share the financial responsibility. She was misquoted; it was reported as "Mississippi is going to pay for this."^[71]

Till's mutilated corpse on display. His mother had insisted on an open-casket funeral. Images of Till's body, printed in The Chicago Defender and Jet magazine, made international news and directed attention to the lack of rights of blacks in the U.S. South.

The A. A. Rayner Funeral Home in Chicago received Till's body. Upon arrival, Bradley insisted on viewing it to make a positive identification, later stating that the stench from it was noticeable two blocks away.^[72] She decided to have an open-casket funeral, saying: "There was just no way I could describe what was in that box. No way. And I just wanted the world to see."^[62] Tens of thousands of people lined the street outside the mortuary to view Till's body, and days later thousands more attended his funeral at Roberts Temple Church of God in Christ.

Photographs of his mutilated corpse circulated around the country, notably appearing in Jet magazine and The Chicago Defender, both black publications, generating intense public reaction. According to The Nation and Newsweek, Chicago's black community was "aroused as it has not been over any similar act in recent history".^[73]^[note 7] Time later selected one of the Jet photographs showing Mamie Till over the mutilated body of her dead son, as one of the 100 "most influential images of all time": "For almost a century, African Americans were lynched with regularity and impunity. Now, thanks to a mother's determination to expose the barbarousness of the crime, the public could no longer pretend to ignore what they couldn't see."^[74] Till was buried on September 6 in Burr Oak Cemetery in Alsip, Illinois.^[75]

News about Emmett Till spread to both coasts. Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley and Illinois Governor William Stratton also became involved, urging Mississippi Governor White to see that justice was done. The tone in Mississippi newspapers changed dramatically. They falsely reported riots in the funeral home in Chicago. Bryant and Milam appeared in photos smiling and wearing military uniforms,^[76] and Carolyn Bryant's beauty and virtue were extolled. Rumors of an invasion of outraged blacks and northern whites were printed throughout the state, and were taken seriously by the Leflore

County Sheriff. T. R. M. Howard, a local businessman, surgeon, and civil rights proponent and one of the wealthiest blacks in the state, warned of a “second civil war” if “slaughtering of Negroes” was allowed.^[77]

Following Roy Wilkins’ comments, white opinion began to shift. According to historian Stephen J. Whitfield, a specific brand of xeno-phobia in the South was particularly strong in Mississippi. Whites were urged to reject the influence of Northern opinion and agitation.^[78] This independent attitude was profound enough in Tallahatchie County that it earned the nickname “The Freestate of Tallahatchie”, according to a former sheriff, “because people here do what they damn well please”, making the county often difficult to govern.^[79]

Tallahatchie County Sheriff Clarence Strider, who initially positively identified Till’s body and stated that the case against Milam and Bryant was “pretty good”, on September 3 announced his doubts that the body pulled from the Tallahatchie River was that of Till. He speculated that the boy was probably still alive. Strider suggested that the recovered body had been planted by the NAACP: a corpse stolen by T. R. M. Howard, who colluded to place Till’s ring on it.^[80] Strider changed his account after comments were published in the press denigrating the people of Mississippi, later saying: “The last thing I wanted to do was to defend those pecker-woods. But I just had no choice about it.”^[38]^{[note}

Bryant and Milam were indicted for murder. The state’s prosecuting attorney, Hamilton Caldwell, was not confident that he could get a con-viction in a case of white violence against a black male accused of insulting a white woman. A local black paper was surprised at the indictment and praised the decision, as did The New York Times. The high-profile comments published in Northern newspapers and by the NAACP were of concern to the prosecuting attorney, Gerald Chatham; he worried that his office would not be able to secure a guilty verdict, despite the compelling evidence. Having limited funds, Bryant and Milam initially had difficulty finding attorneys to represent them, but five attorneys at a Sumner law firm offered their services pro bono.^[78] Their supporters placed collection jars in stores and other public places in the Delta, eventually gathering $10,000 for the defense.^[81]

Trial

The trial was held in the county courthouse in Sumner, the western seat of Tallahatchie County, because Till's body was found in this area. Sumner had one boarding house; the small town was besieged by reporters from all over the country. David Halberstam called the trial "the first great media event of the civil rights movement".^[82] A reporter who had covered the trials of Bruno Hauptmann and Machine Gun Kelly remarked that this was the most publicity for any trial he had ever seen.^[38] No hotels were open to black visitors. Mamie Till Bradley arrived to testify, and the trial also attracted black congressman Charles Diggs from Michigan. Bradley, Diggs, and several black reporters stayed at T. R. M. Howard's home in Mound Bayou. Located on a large lot and surrounded by Howard's armed guards, it resembled a compound.

The day before the start of the trial, a young black man named Frank Young arrived to tell Howard he knew of two witnesses to the crime. Levi "Too Tight" Collins and Henry Lee Loggins were black employees of Leslie Milam, J. W.'s brother, in whose shed Till was beaten. Collins and Loggins were spotted with J. W. Milam, Bryant, and Till. The prosecution team was unaware of Collins and Loggins.

Sheriff Strider, however, booked them into the Charleston, Mississippi, jail to keep them from testifying.^[83]

The trial was held in September 1955 and lasted for five days; attendees remembered that the weather was very hot. The courtroom was filled to capacity with 280 spectators; black attendees sat in segregated sections.

[84] Press from major national newspapers attended, including black publications; black reporters were required to sit in the segregated black section and away from the white press, farther from the jury. Sheriff Strider welcomed black spectators coming back from lunch with a cheerful, "Hello, Niggers!" [85] Some visitors from the North found the court to be run with surprising informality. Jury members were allowed to drink beer on duty, and many white male spectators wore handguns. [86]

Till's uncle, Mose Wright, identifying J. W. Milam during Milam's trial, an act which "signified intimidation of Delta blacks was no longer as effective as the past". [87] Wright had "crossed a line that no one could remember a black man ever crossing in Mississippi". [88] Photojournalist Ernest Withers defied the judge's orders banning photography during the trial to capture this shot.

The defense sought to cast doubt on the identity of the body pulled from the river. They said it could not be positively identified, and they questioned whether Till was dead at all. The defense also asserted that although Bryant and Milam had taken Till from his great-uncle's house, they had released him that night. The defense attorneys attempted to prove that Mose Wright—who was addressed as “Uncle Mose” by the prosecution and “Mose” by the defense—could not identify Bryant and Milam as the men who took Till from his cabin. They noted that only Milam's flashlight had been in use that night, and no other lights in the house were turned on. Milam and Bryant had identified themselves to Wright the evening they took Till; Wright said he had only seen Milam clearly. Wright's testimony was considered remarkably courageous. It may have been the first time in the South that a black man had testified to the guilt of a white man in court—and lived.^[89]

Journalist James Hicks, who worked for the black news wire service, the National Negro Publishers Association (later renamed the National Newspaper Publishers Association), was present in the courtroom; he was especially impressed that Wright stood to identify Milam, pointing to him and saying “There he is”,^[note 9] calling it a historic moment and one filled with “electricity”.^[90] A writer for the New York Post noted that following his identification, Wright sat “with a lurch which told better than anything else the cost in strength to him of the thing he had done”.^[91] A reporter who covered the trial for the New Orleans Times-Picayune said it was “the most dramatic thing I saw in my career”.^[92]

Mamie Till Bradley testified that she had instructed her son to watch his manners in Mississippi and that should a situation ever come to his being asked to get on his knees to ask forgiveness of a white person, he should do it without a thought. The defense questioned her identification of her son in the casket in Chicago and a $400 life insurance policy she had taken out on him.^[93]

While the trial progressed, Leflore County Sheriff George Smith, Howard, and several reporters, both black and white, attempted to locate Collins and Loggins. They could not, but found three witnesses who had seen Collins and Loggins with Milam and Bryant on Leslie Milam's property. Two of them testified that they heard someone being beaten, blows, and cries.^[93] One testified so quietly the judge ordered him several times to speak louder; he said he heard the victim call out: "Mama, Lord have mercy. Lord have mercy."^[94] Judge Curtis Swango allowed Carolyn Bryant to testify, but not in front of the jury, after the prosecution objected that her testimony was irrelevant to Till's abduction and murder. It may have been leaked in any case to the jury. Sheriff Strider testified for the defense his theory that Till was alive, and that the body retrieved from the river was white. A doctor from Greenwood stated on the stand that the body was too decomposed to identify, and therefore had been in the water too long for it to be Till.^[95]

In the concluding statements, one prosecuting attorney said that what Till did was wrong, but that his action warranted a spanking, not murder. Gerald Chatham passionately called for justice and mocked the sheriff and doctor's statements that alluded to a conspiracy. Mamie Bradley indicated she was very impressed with his summation.^[96] The defense stated that the prosecution's theory of the events the night Till was murdered was improbable, and said the jury's "forefathers would turn over in their graves" if they convicted Bryant and Milam. Only three outcomes were possible in Mississippi for capital murder: life imprisonment, the death penalty, or acquittal. On September 23 the all-white, all-male jury (both women and blacks had been banned)^[97] acquitted

both defendants after a 67-minute deliberation; one juror said, “If we hadn’t stopped to drink pop, it wouldn’t have taken that long.”^{[98][99]}

In post-trial analyses, blame for the outcome varied. Mamie Till Bradley was criticized for not crying enough on the stand. The jury was noted to have been picked almost exclusively from the hill country section of Talla-hatchie County, which, due to its poorer economic make-up, found whites and blacks competing for land and other agrarian opportunities. Unlike the population living closer to the river (and thus closer to Bryant and Milam in Leflore County), who possessed a noblesse oblige outlook toward blacks, according to historian Stephen Whitaker, those in the eastern part of the county were virulent in their racism. The prosecution was criticized for dismissing any potential juror who knew Milam or Bryant personally, for fear that such a juror would vote to acquit. Afterwards, Whitaker noted that this had been a mistake, as those who knew the defendants usually disliked them.^{[38][96]} One juror voted twice to convict, but on the third discussion, voted with the rest of the jury to acquit.^[100] In later interviews, the jurors acknowledged that they knew Bryant and Milam were guilty, but simply did not believe that life imprisonment or the death penalty were fit punishment for whites who had killed a black man.^[101] However, two jurors said as late as 2005 that they believed the defense’s case. They also said that the prosecution had not proved that Till had died, nor that it was his body that was removed from the river.^[100]

In November 1955, a grand jury declined to indict Bryant and Milam for kidnapping, despite their own admissions of having taken Till. Mose Wright and a young man named Willie Reed, who testified to seeing Milam enter the shed from which screams and blows were heard, both testified in front of the grand jury.^[102] After the trial, T.

R. M. Howard paid the costs of relocating to Chicago for Wright, Reed, and another black witness who testified against Milam and Bryant, in order to protect the three witnesses from reprisals for having testified.^[96] Reed, who later changed his name to Willie Louis to avoid being found, continued to live in the Chicago area until his death on July 18, 2013. He avoided publicity and even kept his history secret from his wife until she was told by a relative. Reed began to speak publicly about the case in the PBS documentary The Murder of Emmett Till, aired in 2003.^[103]

Media discourse

Newspapers in major international cities and religious, and socialist publica-tions reported outrage about the verdict and strong criticism of American society. Southern newspapers, particularly in Mississippi, wrote that the court system had done its job.^[104] Till's story continued to make the news for weeks following the trial, sparking debate in newspapers, among the NAACP and various high-profile segregationists about justice for blacks and the propriety of Jim Crow society.^[citation needed]

In October 1955, the Jackson Daily News reported facts about Till's fa-ther that had been suppressed by the U.S. military. While serving in Italy, Louis Till raped two women and killed a third. He was court-martialed and executed by hanging by the Army near Pisa in July 1945. Mamie Till Bradley and her family knew none of this, having been told only that Louis had been killed for "willful misconduct". Mississippi senators James Eastland and John C. Stennis probed Army records and revealed Louis Till's crimes. Although Emmett Till's murder trial was over, news about his father was carried on the front pages of Mississippi newspapers for weeks in October and November 1955. This renewed debate about Emmett Till's actions and Carolyn Bryant's integrity. Stephen Whitfield writes that the lack of attention paid to identifying or finding Till is "strange" compared to the amount of published discourse about his father.^[105] According to historians Davis Houck and Matthew Grindy, “Louis Till became a most important rhetorical pawn in the high-stakes game of north versus south, black versus white, NAACP versus White Citizens’ Councils”.^[12] In 2016, reviewing the facts of the rapes and murder for which Louis Till had been executed, John Edgar Wideman posited that, given the timing of the publicity about Emmett’s father, although the defendants had already confessed to taking Emmett from his uncle’s house, the post-murder trial grand jury refused to even indict them for kidnapping.^{[106][107]} Wideman also presented evidence suggesting that the conviction and punishment of Louis Till may have been racially motivated.^[108]

If the facts as stated in the Look magazine account of the Till affair are correct, this remains: two adults, armed, in the dark, kidnap a fourteen-year-old boy and take him away to frighten him. Instead of which, the fourteen-year-old boy not only refuses to be frightened, but, unarmed, alone, in the dark, so frightens the two armed adults that they must de-stroy him ... What are we Mississippians afraid of?

—William Faulkner, “On Fear”, 1956^[109]

Protected against double jeopardy, Bryant and Milam struck a deal with Look magazine in 1956 to tell their story to journalist William Bradford Huie for between $3,600 and $4,000. The interview took place in the law firm of the attorneys who had defended Bryant and Milam. Huie did not ask the questions; Bryant and Milam’s own attorneys did. Neither attorney had heard their clients’ accounts of the murder before. According to Huie, the older Milam was more articulate and sure of himself than the younger Bryant. Milam admitted to shooting Till and neither of them believed they were guilty or that they had done anything wrong.^[110]

Reaction to Huie's interview with Bryant and Milam was explosive. Their brazen admission that they had murdered Till caused prominent civil rights leaders to push the federal government harder to investigate the case. Till's murder contributed to congressional passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1957: it authorized the U.S. Department of Justice to intervene in local law enforcement issues when individual civil rights were being compromised.^[38] Huie's interview, in which Milam and Bryant said they had acted alone, overshadowed inconsistencies in earlier versions of the stories. As a consequence, details about others who had possibly been involved in Till's abduction and murder, or the subsequent cover-up, were forgotten, according to historians David and Linda Beito.^{[111][note 10]}

Later events

Till's murder increased fears in the local black community that they would be subjected to violence and the law would not protect them. According to Deloris Melton Gresham, whose father was killed a few months after Till, "At that time, they used to say that 'it's open season on ns.' Kill'em and get away with it."^[112]

After Bryant and Milam admitted to Huie that they had killed Till, the support base of the two men eroded in Mississippi.^[113] Many of their former friends and supporters, including those who had contributed to their defense funds, cut them off. Blacks boycotted their shops, which went bankrupt and closed, and banks refused to grant them loans to plant crops.^[38] After struggling to secure a loan and find someone who would rent to him, Milam managed to secure 217 acres (88 ha) and a $4,000 loan to plant cotton, but blacks refused to work for him. He was forced to pay whites higher wages.^[114] Eventually, Milam and Bryant relocated to Texas, but their infamy followed them; they continued to generate animosity from locals. In 1961, while in Texas, when Bryant recognized the license plate of a Tallahatchie County resident, he called out a greeting and identified himself. The resident, upon hearing the name, drove away without speaking to Bryant.^[115] After several years, they returned to Mississippi. Milam found work as a heavy equipment operator, but ill health forced him into retirement. Over the years, Milam was tried for offenses including assault and battery, writing bad checks, and using a stolen credit card. He died of spinal cancer on December 30, 1980, at the age of 61.^[114] Bryant worked as a welder while in Texas, until increasing blindness forced him to give up this employment. At some point, he and Carolyn divorced; he remarried in 1980. He opened a store in Ruleville, Mississippi. He was convicted in 1984 and 1988 of food stamp fraud. In a 1985 interview, he denied killing Till despite having admitted to it in 1956, but said: “if Emmett Till hadn’t got out of line, it probably wouldn’t have happened to him.” Fearing economic boycotts and retaliation, Bryant lived a private life and refused to be photographed or reveal the exact location of his store, explaining: “this new generation is different and I don’t want to worry about a bullet some dark night”.^[116] He died of cancer on September 1, 1994, at the age of 63.^[117]

Till’s mother married Gene Mobley, became a teacher, and changed her surname to Till-Mobley. She continued to educate people about her son’s murder. In 1992, Till-Mobley had the opportunity to listen while Bryant was interviewed about involvement in Till’s murder. With Bryant unaware that Till-Mobley was listening, he asserted that Till had ruined his life, expressed no remorse, and said: “Emmett Till is dead. I don’t know why he can’t just stay dead.”^[118]

In 1996, documentary filmmaker Keith Beauchamp, who was greatly moved by Till’s open-casket photograph,^[82] started background research for a feature film he planned to make about Till’s murder. He asserted that as many as 14 people may have been involved, including Carolyn Bryant Donham (who by this point had remarried). Mose Wright heard someone with “a lighter voice” affirm that Till was the one in his front yard immediately before Bryant and Milam drove away with the boy. Beauchamp spent the next nine years producing The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till, released in 2003. That same year, PBS aired an installment of American Experience titled The Murder of Emmett Till. In 2005, CBS journalist Ed Bradley aired a 60 Minutes report investigating the Till murder, part of which showed him tracking down Carolyn Bryant at her home in Greenville, Mississippi.^[119]

A 1991 book written by Stephen J. Whitfield, another by Christopher Metress in 2002, and Mamie Till-Mobley’s memoirs the next year all posed questions as to who was involved in the murder and cover-up. Federal authorities in the 21st century worked to resolve the questions about the identity of the body pulled from the Tallahatchie River.^[120]

In 2004, the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) announced that it was reopening the case to determine whether anyone other than Milam and Bryant was involved.^[121] David T. Beito, a professor at the University of Alabama, states that Till's murder "has this mythic quality like the Kennedy assassination".^[92] The DOJ had undertaken to investigate numerous cold cases dating to the civil rights movement, in the hope of finding new evidence in other murders as well.

The body was exhumed, and the Cook County coroner conducted an autopsy in 2005. Using DNA from Till's relatives, dental comparisons to images taken of Till, and anthropological analysis, the exhumed body was positively identified as that of Till. It had extensive cranial damage, a broken left femur, and two broken wrists. Metallic fragments found in the skull were consistent with bullets being fired from a .45 caliber gun.^[122]

In February 2007, a Leflore County grand jury, composed primarily of black jurors and empaneled by Joyce Chiles, a black prosecutor, found no credible basis for Beauchamp's claim that 14 people took part in Till's abduction and murder. Beauchamp was angry with the finding. David Beito and Juan Williams, who worked on the reading materials for the Eyes on the Prize documentary, were critical of Beauchamp for trying to revise history and taking attention away from other cold cases.^[123] The grand jury failed to find sufficient cause for charges against Carolyn Bryant Donham. Neither the FBI nor the grand jury found any credible evidence that Henry Lee Loggins, identified by Beauchamp as a suspect who could be charged, had any role in the crime. Other than Loggins, Beauchamp refused to name any of the people he alleged were involved.^[92]

Historical markers

For 50 years nobody talked about Emmett Till. I think we just have to be resilient and know there are folks out there that don't want to know this history or who want to erase the history. We are just going to be resilient in continuing to put them back up and be truthful in making make sure that Emmett didn't die in vain.

—Patrick Weems, executive director of the Emmett Till Memorial Com-mission, speaking in October 2019 at the unveiling of a bullet proof his-torical marker (the previous three markers at the site having been shot up) near the Tallahatchie River.^[124]

The first highway marker remembering Emmett Till, erected in 2006, was defaced with “KKK”, and then completely covered with black paint.^[125] In 2007, eight markers were erected at sites associated with Till's lynching. The marker at the “River Spot” where Till's body was found was torn down in 2008, presumably thrown in the river. A replacement sign received more than 100 bullet holes over the next few years.^[126] Another replacement was installed in June 2018, and in July it was vandalized by bullets.

Three University of Mississippi students were suspended from their fraternity after posing in front of the bullet-riddled marker, with guns, and uploading the photo to Instagram.^[127] As stated by Jerry Mitchell, “It is not clear whether the fraternity students shot the sign or are simply posing before it.”^[127] In 2019, a fourth sign was erected. It is made of steel, weighs 500 pounds (230 kg), is over 1 inch (2.5 cm) thick, and is said by its manufacturer to be indestructible.^[128] interview with Carolyn Bryant. He claimed that during the interview she had dis-

Claim that Carolyn Bryant recanted her testimony

closed that she had fabricated parts of her testimony at the trial.^{[129][41]}
^[130] Tyson said that during the interview, Bryant retracted her testimony that Till had grabbed her around her waist and uttered obscenities, saying “that part’s not true”.^{[131][132]} The jury did not hear Bryant’s testimony at the trial as the judge had ruled it inadmissible, but the court spectators heard. The defense wanted Bryant’s testimony as evidence for a possible appeal in case of a conviction.^{[129][133]} In the 2008 interview, the 72-year-old Bryant said she could not remember the rest of the events that occurred between her and Till in the grocery store.^[129] She also said: “nothing that boy did could ever justify what happened to him”.^[132] Tyson said that Roy Bryant had been abusive toward Carolyn, and “it was clear she was frightened of her husband”. Tyson believed Carolyn embellished her testimony under coercive circumstances. Bryant described Milam as “domineering and bru-tal and not a kind man”.^[132] An editorial in The New York Times said, re-garding Bryant’s admission that portions of her testimony were false: “This admission is a reminder of how black lives were sacrificed to white lies in places like Mississippi. It also raises anew the question of why no one was brought to justice in the most notorious racially motivated murder of the 20th century, despite an extensive investigation by the F.B.I.”^[134]

The New York Times quoted Wheeler Parker, a cousin of Till’s, who said: “I was hoping that one day she [Bryant] would admit it, so it matters to me that she did, and it gives me some satisfaction. It’s important to people understanding how the word of a white person against a Black person was law, and a lot of black people lost their lives because of it. It really speaks to history; it shows what black people went through in those days.”^[3]

In a report to Congress in March 2018, the U.S. Department of Justice stated that it was reopening the investigation into Till’s death due to new information.^{[135][136]}

However, the ‘recanting’ claim made by Tyson was not on his tape-re-cording of the interview. “It is true that that part is not on tape because I was setting up the tape recorder” Tyson said. Donham’s daughter-in-law, Marsha Bryant, who was present for the two interviews, said her mother-in-law “never recanted”. The support Tyson provided to back up his claim, was a handwritten note that he said had been made at the time.^[137]

In December 2021, the U.S. Justice Department announced that it had closed its investigation in the case.^{[138][139]}

Influence on civil rights

Somehow [Till’s death and trial] struck a spark of indignation that ignited protests around the world ... It was the murder of this 14-year-old out-of-state visitor that touched off a world-wide clamor and cast the glare of a world spotlight on Mississippi’s racism.

—Myrlie Evers^[140]

Till’s case attracted widespread attention because of the brutality of the lynching, the victim’s young age, and the acquittal of the two men who later admitted killing him. It became emblematic of the injustices suffered by blacks in the South. In 1955 The Chicago Defender urged its readers to react to the acquittal by voting in large numbers; this was to counter the disenfranchisement since 1890 of most blacks in Mississippi by the white-dominated legislature; other southern states followed this model, excluding hundreds of thousands of citizens from politics.^[141] Myrlie Evers, the widow of Medgar Evers, said in 1985 that Till’s case resonated so strongly because it “shook the foundations of Mississippi – both black and white, because ... with the white community ... it had become nationally publicized ... with us as blacks ... it said, even a child was not safe from racism and bigotry and death.”^[142]

The NAACP asked Mamie Till Bradley to tour the country relating the events of her son’s life, death, and the trial of his murderers. It was one of the most successful fundraising campaigns the NAACP had ever conduct-ed.^[143] Journalist Louis Lomax acknowledges Till’s death to be the start of what he terms the “Negro revolt”, and scholar Clenora Hudson-Weems characterizes Till as a “sacrificial lamb” for civil rights. NAACP operative Amzie Moore considers Till the start of the Civil Rights Movement, at the very least, in Mississippi.^[144]

The 1987 Eyes on the Prize, a 14-hour Emmy award-winning docu-mentary, begins with the murder of Emmett Till. Accompanying written materials for the series, Eyes on the Prize and Voices of Freedom (for the second time period), exhaustively explore the major figures and events of the Civil Rights Movement. Stephen Whitaker states that, as a result of the attention Till’s death and the trial received,

Mississippi became in the eyes of the nation the epitome of racism and the citadel of white supremacy. From this time on, the slightest racial in-cident anywhere in the state was spotlighted and magnified. To the Negro race throughout the South and to some extent in other parts of the coun-try, this verdict indicated an end to the system of ‘noblesse oblige.’ The faith in the white power structure waned rapidly. Negro faith in legalism declined, and the revolt officially began on December 1, 1955, with the Montgomery, Alabama, bus boycott.^[38]

I thought of Emmett Till and I just couldn’t go back.

— Rosa Parks, on her refusal to move to the back of the bus, launching the Montgomery bus boycott.^[140]

In Montgomery, Rosa Parks attended a rally for Till, led by Martin Luther King Jr.^[145] Soon after, she refused to give up her seat on a segregated bus to a white passenger. The incident sparked a year-long well-organized grassroots boycott of the public bus system. The boycott was designed to force the city to change its segregation policies. Parks later said when she did not get up and move to the rear of the bus, “I thought of Emmett Till and I just couldn’t go back.”^[146]

According to author Clayborne Carson, Till’s death and the wide-spread coverage of the students integrating Little Rock Central High School in 1957 were especially profound for younger blacks: “It was out of this festering discontent and an awareness of earlier isolated protests that the sit-ins of the 1960s were born.”^[147] After seeing pictures of Till’s mutilated body, in Louisville, Kentucky, young Cassius Clay (later famed boxer Muhammad Ali) and a friend took out their frustration by vandalizing a local railyard, causing a locomotive engine to derail.^{[148][149]}

In 1963, Sunflower County resident and sharecropper Fannie Lou Hamer was jailed and beaten for attempting to register to vote. The next year, she led a massive voter registration drive in the Delta region, and volunteers worked on Freedom Summer throughout the state. Before 1954, 265 black people were registered to vote in three Delta counties, where they were a majority of the population. At this time, blacks made up 41% of the total state population. The summer Emmett Till was killed, the number of registered voters in those three counties dropped to 90. By the end of 1955, fourteen Mississippi counties had no registered black voters.

^[150] The Mississippi Freedom Summer of 1964 registered 63,000

black voters in a simplified process administered by the project; they formed their own political party because they were closed out of the Democratic Regulars in Mississippi.^[151]

- A statue was unveiled in Denver in 1976 (and has since been moved to Pueblo, Colorado) featuring Till with Martin Luther King Jr.
- In 1984, a section of 71st Street in Chicago was named “Em-mett Till Road” and in 2005, the 71st street bridge was named in his honor.^[152]

- In 1989, Till was included among the forty names of people who had died in the Civil Rights Movement; they are listed as mar-tyrs on the granite sculpture of the Civil Rights Memorial in Montgomery, Alabama.^{[153][154]}
- A demonstration for Till was held in 2000 in Selma, Alabama, on the 35th anniversary of the march over the Edmund Pettus Bridge. His mother Mamie Till-Mobley attended and later wrote in her memoirs: “I realized that Emmett had achieved the signif-icant impact in death that he had been denied in life. Even so, I had never wanted Emmett to be a martyr. I only wanted him to be a good son. Although I realized all the great things that had been accomplished largely because of the sacrifices made by so many people, I found myself wishing that somehow we could have done it another way.”^[155]
- In 2005, James McCosh Elementary School in Chicago, where Till had been a student, was renamed the “Emmett Louis Till Math And Science Academy”.^[156]
- In 2006 the “Emmett Till Memorial Highway” was dedicated between Greenwood and Tutwiler, Mississippi; this was the route his body was taken to the train station, to be returned to his mother for burial in Chicago. It intersects with the H. C. “Clar-ence” Strider Memorial Highway.^[157]
- In 2006 the Emmett Till Memorial Commission was established by the Tallahatchie Board of Supervisors^[158]

- In 2007, the Emmett Till Memorial Commission issued a formal apology to Till's family at an event attended by 400 people.

It reads

We the citizens of Tallahatchie County recognize that the Emmett Till case was a terrible miscarriage of justice. We state candidly and with deep regret the failure to effectively pursue justice. We wish to say to the family of Emmett Till that we are profoundly sorry for what was done in this community to your loved one.^{[159][158]}

- The same year, Georgia congressman John Lewis sponsored a bill to provide a plan for investigating and prosecuting unsolved (cold case) Civil Rights-era murders. The Emmett Till Unsolved Civil Rights Crime Act was signed into law in 2008.^[160]
- In 2008 a memorial plaque that was erected in Tallahatchie Coun-ty, next to the Tallahatchie River at Graball Landing where Till's body was retrieved, was stolen, and never recovered.^[161] The plaque was a "frequent target for racist vandalism".^[161] The location is in a remote area and down a gravel road, meaning that vandals had to go out of the way to get to it.^[161] Its replacement was soon also shot up, as was the replacement sign after that.^[162] In October 2019, a new bulletproof sign costing over $10,000, and weighing over 500 pounds (230 kg) was installed.^{[163][162]} In November 2019, a group of white supremacists was caught making a propaganda video in front of the sign raising new concerns that more vandalism is being planned. The group was carrying a white flag with a black St. Andrews cross, a flag commonly used by a racist Neo-Confeder-ate group called the League of the South. The group quickly scat-tered when they set off alarms designed to protect the sign.^{[164][165]}

- The Tallahatchie County Courthouse in Sumner, site of the 1955 trial of Till's killers, was restored and re-opened in 2012. The Emmett Till Interpretive Center opened across the street and is also serving as a community center.^[158]

- The Emmett Till Memorial Project is an associated website and smartphone app to commemorate Till's death and his life. It identifies 51 sites in the Mississippi Delta associated with him.^[158] On August 29, 2015, the Center held a 60th anniversary event.^{[166][167]}
- In 2015, Florida State University Libraries created the Emmett Till archives.^{[168][169]}
- A 2018 film about the television series Star Trek: Deep Space Nine introduced a starship named after Till, the USS Emmett Till.^[170]
- In 2020, the National Trust for Historic Preservation named Roberts Temple Church of God in Christ, the site of Till's funeral, as one of America's most endangered historic places.^[4]
- In 2022, the U.S. Senate voted to award Emmett Till and his mother, Mamie Till-Mobley, the Congressional Gold Medal, forwarding the measure for concurrent action in the U.S. House of Representatives.^{[171][172]} autopsy and DNA analysis which confirmed the identification of his body. As required by state reburial law, Till was reinterred in a new casket later that year.^[174] In 2009, his original glass-topped casket was found, rusting in a dilapidated storage

Casket

The story of Emmett Till is one of the most important of the last half of the 20th century. And an important element was the casket ... It is an object that allows us to tell the story, to feel the pain and understand loss. I want people to feel like I did. I want people to feel the complexity of emotions.

—Lonnie Bunch III, director of the Smithsonian's National Museum of African American History and Culture^[173]

During a renewed investigation of the crime in 2005, the Department of Justice exhumed Till's remains to conduct an shed at the cemetery.^[175] The casket was discolored and the interior fabric torn. It bore evidence that animals had been living in it, although its glass top was still intact. The Smithsonian's National Museum of African American History and Culture in Washington, D.C. acquired the casket a month later.^[173]

Representation in culture

Langston Hughes dedicated an untitled poem (eventually to be known as "Mississippi—1955") to Till in his October 1, 1955, column in The Chicago Defender. It was reprinted across the country and continued to be republished with various changes from different writers.^[176] Author William Faulkner, a prominent white Mississippi native who often focused on racial issues, wrote two essays on Till: one before the trial in which he pleaded for American unity and one after, a piece titled "On Fear" that was published in Harper's in 1956. In it he questioned why the tenets of segregation were based on irrational reasoning.^[109]

Till's murder was the focus of a 1957 television episode for the U.S. Steel Hour titled "Noon on Doomsday" written by Rod Serling. He was fascinated by how quickly Mississippi whites supported Bryant and Milam. Although the script was rewritten to avoid mention of Till, and did not say that the murder victim was black, White Citizens' Councils vowed to boycott U.S. Steel. The eventual episode bore little resemblance to the Till case.^[177]

Gwendolyn Brooks wrote a poem titled "A Bronzeville Mother Loiters in Mississippi. Meanwhile, A Mississippi Mother Burns Bacon" (1960).

^[178] The same year Harper Lee published To Kill a Mockingbird, in which a white attorney is committed to defending a black man named Tom Robinson, accused of raping a white woman. Lee, whose novel had a profound effect on civil rights, never commented on why she wrote about Robinson. Literature professor Patrick Chura noted several similarities between Till's case and that of Robinson.^[179] Writer James Baldwin loosely based his 1964 drama Blues for Mister Charlie on the Till case. He later divulged that Till's murder had been bothering him for several years.^[180]

Anne Moody mentioned the Till case in her autobiography, Coming of Age in Mississippi, in which she states she first learned to hate during the fall of 1955.^{[181][182]} Audre Lorde's poem "Afterimages" (1981) focuses on the perspective of a black woman thinking of Carolyn Bryant 24 years after the murder and trial. Bebe Moore Campbell's 1992 novel Your Blues Ain't Like Mine centers on the events of Till's death. Toni Morrison mentions Till's death in the novel Song of Solomon (1977) and later wrote the play Dreaming Emmett (1986), which follows Till's life and the aftermath of his death.^[183] The play is a feminist look at the roles of men and women in black society, which she was inspired to write while considering "time through the eyes of one person who could come back to life and seek vengeance".^[184] Emmylou Harris includes a song called "My Name is Emmett Till" on her 2011 album, Hard Bargain. According to scholar Christopher Metress, Till is often reconfigured in literature as a specter that haunts the white people of Mississippi, causing them to question their involvement in evil, or silence about injustice.^[180] The 2002 book Mississippi Trials, 1955 is a fictionalized account of Till's death. The 2015 song by Janelle Monáe "Hell You Talmhout" invokes the names of African-American people—including Emmett Till—who died as a result of encounters with law enforcement or racial violence. In 2016 artist Dana Schutz painted Open Casket, a work based on photographs of Till in his coffin as well as on an account by Till's mother of seeing him after his death.^[185]

Mercy Mercy Me

Grover Washington Jr.

Woo mercy, mercy me
Ah things ain't what they used to be, no, no Oil wasted on the ocean and upon
Our seas fish full of mercury,
ah. oh Ah things ain't what they used to be What about this overcrowded land
How much more abuse from man can she stand? ()

Murders of Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner

(https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/9/96/Civil_Rights_Workers.jpg) By Federal Bureau of Investigation – Public Broadcasting Service, Public Domain,

The murders of Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner, also known as the Freedom Summer murders, the Mississippi civil rights workers' murders, or the Mississippi Burning murders, refers to events in which three activists were abducted and murdered in the city of Philadelphia, Mississippi, in June 1964 during the Civil Rights Movement. The victims were James Chaney from Meridian, Mississippi, and Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner from New York City. All three were associated with the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) and its member organization, the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). They had been working with the Freedom

Summer campaign by attempting to register African Americans in Mississippi to vote. Since 1890 and through the turn of the century, southern states had systematically dis-enfranchised most black voters by discrimination in voter registration and voting.

The three men had traveled from Meridian to the community of Long-dale to talk with congregation members at a Black church that had been burned; the church had been a center of community organization. The trio was arrested following a traffic stop for speeding outside Philadelphia, Mississippi, escorted to the local jail, and held for a number of hours.^[1] As the three left town in their car, they were followed by law enforcement and others. Before leaving Neshoba County, their car was pulled over. The three were abducted, driven to another location, and shot to death at close range. The bodies of the three men were taken to an earthen dam where they were buried.^[1]

The disappearance of the three men was initially investigated as a missing persons case. The civil rights workers' burnt-out car was found near a swamp three days after their disappearance.^{[2][3]} An extensive search of the area was conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), local and state authorities, and four hundred United States Navy sailors.

^[4]Their bodies were not discovered until two months later, when the team received a tip. During the investigation it emerged that members of the local White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, the Neshoba County Sheriff's Office, and the Philadelphia Police Department were involved in the incident.^[1]

The murder of the activists sparked national outrage and an extensive federal investigation, filed as Mississippi Burning (MIBURN), which later became the title of a 1988 film loosely based on the events. In 1967, after the state government refused to prosecute, the United States federal government charged eighteen individuals with civil rights violations. Seven were convicted and received relatively minor sentences for their actions. Outrage over the activists' disappearances helped gain passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.^[5]

Forty-one years after the murders took place, one perpetrator, Edgar Ray Killen, was charged by the state of Mississippi for his part in the crimes. In 2005 he was convicted of three counts of manslaughter and was given a 60-year sentence.^[6] On June 20, 2016, federal and state authorities officially closed the case, ending the possibility of further prosecution. Killen died in prison in January 2018.

Background [edit]

In the early 1960s, the state of Mississippi, as well as most of the American South, defied federal direction regarding racial integration.^{[7][8]} Recent Supreme Court rulings had upset the Mississippi establishment, and White Mississippian society responded with open hostility. White supremacists used tactics such as bombings, murders, vandalism, and intimidation in order to discourage black Mississippians and their supporters from the Northern and Western states. In 1961, Freedom Riders, who challenged the segregation of interstate buses and related facilities, were attacked on their route. In September 1962, the University of Mississippi riots had occurred in order to prevent James Meredith from enrolling at the school.

The White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, a Ku Klux Klan splinter group based in Mississippi, was founded and led by Samuel Bowers of Laurel. As the summer of 1964 approached, white Mississippians prepared for what they perceived was an invasion from the north and west. College students had been recruited in order to aid local activists who were conducting grassroots community organizing, voter registration education and drives in the state. Media reports exaggerated the number of youths expected.^[9] One Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) representative is quoted as saying that nearly 30,000 individuals would visit Mississippi during the summer.^[9] Such reports had a “jarring impact” on white Mississippians and many responded by joining the White Knights.^[9]

In 1890, Mississippi had passed a new constitution, supported by additional laws, which effectively excluded most black Mississippians from registering or voting. This status quo had long been enforced by economic boycotts and violence. The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) wanted to address this problem by setting up Freedom Schools and starting voting registration drives in the state. Freedom schools were established in order to educate, encourage, and register the disenfranchised black citizens.^[10] CORE members James Chaney, from Mississippi, and Michael Schwerner, from New York City, intended to set up a Freedom School for black people in Neshoba County to try to prepare them to pass the comprehension and literacy tests required by the state.

Registering others to vote[edit]

On Memorial Day, May 25, 1964, Schwerner and Chaney spoke to the congregation at Mount Zion Methodist Church in Longdale, Mississippi about setting up a Freedom School.^[1] Schwerner implored the members to register to vote, saying, “you have been slaves too long, we can help you help yourselves”.^[1] The White Knights learned of Schwerner’s voting drive in Neshoba County and soon developed a plot to hinder the work and ultimately destroy their efforts. They wanted to lure CORE workers into Neshoba County, so they attacked congregation members and torched the church, burning it to the ground.

On June 21, 1964, Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner met at the Meridian COFO headquarters before traveling to Longdale to investigate the destruction of the Mount Zion Church. Schwerner told COFO Meridian to search for them if they were not back by 4 p.m.; he said, “if we’re not back by then start trying to locate us.”^[10]

Arrest[edit]

After visiting Longdale, the three civil rights workers decided not to take Road 491 to return to Meridian.^[10] The narrow country road was unpaved; abandoned buildings littered the roadside. They decided to head west on Highway 16 to Philadelphia, the seat of Neshoba County, then take southbound Highway 19 to Meridian, figuring it would be the faster route. The time was approaching 3 p.m., and they were to be in Meridian by 4 p.m.

The CORE station wagon had barely passed the Philadelphia city limits when one of its tires went flat, and Deputy Sheriff Cecil Ray Price turned on his dashboard-mounted red light and followed them.^[10] The trio stopped near the Beacon and Main Street fork. With a long radio antenna mounted to his patrol car, Price

called for Officers Harry Jackson Wiggs

and Earl Robert Poe of the Mississippi Highway Patrol.^[10] Chaney was arrested for driving 65 mph in a 35 mph zone; Goodman and Schwerner were held for investigation. They were taken to the Neshoba County jail on Myrtle Street, a block from the courthouse.

In the Meridian office, workers became alarmed when the 4 p.m. deadline passed without word from the three activists. By 4:45 p.m., they notified the COFO Jackson office that the trio had not returned from Neshoba County.^[10] The CORE workers called area authorities but did not learn anything; the contacted offices said they had not seen the three civil rights workers.^[10]

The conspiracy[edit]

Nine men, including Neshoba County Sheriff Lawrence A. Rainey, were later identified as parties to the conspiracy to murder Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner.^[12] Rainey denied he was ever a part of the conspiracy, but he was accused of ignoring the racially-motivated offenses committed in Neshoba County. At the time of the murders, the 41-year-old Rainey insisted he was visiting his sick wife in a Meridian hospital and was later with family watching Bonanza.^[13] As events unfolded, Rainey became emboldened with his newly found popularity in the Philadelphia community. Known for his tobacco chewing habit, Rainey was photographed and quoted in Life magazine: “Hey, let’s have some Red Man”, as other members of the conspiracy laughed while waiting for an arraignment to start.^[14]

Fifty-year-old Bernard Akin had a mobile home business which he operated out of Meridian; he was a member of the White Knights.^[12] Seventy-one-year-old Otha N. Burkes, who usually went by the nickname of Otha, was a 25-year veteran of the Philadelphia Police. At the time of the December 1964 arraignment, Burkes was awaiting an indictment for a different civil rights case. Olen L. Burrage, who was 34 at the time, owned a trucking company. Burrage was developing a cattle farm which he called the Old Jolly Farm, where the three civil rights workers were found buried. Burrage, a former U.S. Marine who was honorably discharged, was quoted as saying: “I got a dam big enough to hold a hundred of them.”^[15] Several weeks after the murders, Burrage told the FBI: “I want people to know I’m sorry it happened.”^[16] Edgar Ray Killen, a 39-year-old Baptist preacher and sawmill owner, was convicted decades later of orchestrating the murders.

Frank J. Herndon, 46, operated a Meridian drive-in called the Long-horn;^[12] he was the Exalted Grand Cyclops of the Meridian White Knights. James T. Harris, also known as Pete, was a White Knights investigator. The 30-year-old Harris was keeping tabs on the three civil rights workers’ every move. Oliver R. Warner, 54, known as Pops, was a Meridian grocery owner and member of the White Knights. Herman Tucker lived in Hope, Mississippi, a few miles from the Neshoba County Fair grounds. Tucker, 36, was not a member of the White Knights; he was a building contractor who worked for Burrage. The White Knights gave Tucker the assignment of getting rid of the CORE station wagon driven by the workers. White Knights Imperial Wizard Samuel H. Bowers, who served with the U.S. Navy during World War II, was not apprehended on December 4, 1964, but he was implicated the following year. Bowers, then 39, was credited with saying: "This is a war between the Klan and the FBI. And in a war, there have to be some who suffer."^[17]

On Sunday, June 7, 1964, nearly 300 White Knights met near Raleigh, Mississippi.^[18] Bowers addressed the White Knights about what he described as a "nigger-communist invasion of Mississippi" that he expected to take place in a few weeks, in what CORE had announced as Freedom Summer.^[18] The men listened as Bowers said: "This summer the enemy will launch his final push for victory in Mississippi", and, "there must be a secondary group of our members, standing back from the main area of conflict, armed and ready to move. It must be an extremely swift, extremely violent, hit-and-run group."^[18]

Although federal authorities believed many others took part in the Neshoba County lynching, only ten men were charged with the physical murders of Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner.^[19] One of these was Deputy Sheriff Price, 26, who played a crucial role in implementing the conspiracy. Before his friend Rainey was elected sheriff in 1963, Price worked as a salesman, fireman, and bouncer.^[19] Price, who had no prior experience in local law enforcement, was the only person who witnessed the entire event. He arrested the three men, released them the night of the murders, and chased them down state Highway 19 toward Meridian, eventually re-capturing them at the intersection near House, Mississippi. Price and the other nine men escorted them north along Highway 19 to Rock Cut Road, where they forced a stop and murdered the three civil rights workers.

Killen went to Meridian earlier that Sunday to organize and recruit men for the job to be carried out in Neshoba County.^[20] Before the men left for Philadelphia, Travis M. Barnette, 36, went to his Meridian home to take care of a sick family member. Barnette owned a Meridian garage and was a member of the White Knights. Alton W. Roberts, 26, was a dishonorably discharged U.S. Marine who worked as a salesman in Meridian. Roberts, standing 6 ft 3 in (1.91 m) and weighing 270 lb (120 kg), was physically formidable and renowned for his short temper. According to witnesses, Roberts shot both Goodman and Schwerner at point blank range, then shot Chaney in the head after another accomplice, James Jordan, shot him in the abdomen. Roberts asked, "Are you that nigger lover?" to Schwerner, and shot him after the latter responded, "Sir, I know just how you feel."^[21] Jimmy K. Arledge, 27, and Jimmy Snowden, 31, were both Meridian commercial drivers. Arledge, a high school drop-out, and Snowden, a U.S. Army veteran, were present during the murders.

Jerry M. Sharpe, Billy W. Posey, and Jimmy L. Townsend were all from Philadelphia. Sharpe, 21, ran a pulp wood supply house. Posey, 28, a Williamsville automobile mechanic, owned a 1958 red and white Chevrolet; the car was considered fast and was chosen over Sharpe's. The youngest was Townsend, 17; he left high school in 1964 to work at Posey's Phillips 66 garage. Horace D. Barnette, 25, was Travis' younger half-brother; he had a 1957 two-toned blue Ford Fairlane sedan.^[19] Horace's car is the one the group took after Posey's car broke down. Officials say that James Jordan, 38, killed Chaney. He confessed his crimes to the federal authorities in exchange for a plea deal.

Murders[edit]

After Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner's release from the Neshoba County jail shortly after 10 p.m. on June 21,^[22] they were followed almost immediately by Deputy Sheriff Price in his 1957 white Chevrolet sedan patrol car.^[23] Soon afterward, the civil rights workers left the city limits located along Hospital Road and headed south on Highway 19. The work-ers arrived at Pilgrim's store, where they might have been inclined to stop and use the telephone, but the presence of a Mississippi Highway Patrol car, manned by Officers Wiggs and Poe, most likely dissuaded them. They continued south toward Meridian.

The lynch mob members, who were in Barnette's and Posey's cars, were drinking while arguing who would kill the three young men. Eventually, Burkes drove up to Barnette's car and told the group: "They're going on 19 toward Meridian. Follow them!" After a quick rendezvous with Philadelphia Police officer Richard Willis, Price began pursuing the three civil rights workers.

Posey's Chevrolet carried Roberts, Sharpe, and Townsend. The Chevy apparently had carburetor problems, and was forced to the side of the highway. Sharpe and Townsend were ordered to stay with Posey's car and service it. Roberts transferred to Barnette's car, joining Arledge, Jordan, Posey, and Snowden.^[24]

Price eventually caught the CORE station wagon heading west toward Union, on Road 492. Soon he stopped them and escorted the three civil right workers north on Highway 19, back in the direction of Philadelphia. The caravan turned west on County Road 515 (also known as Rock Cut Road), and stopped at the secluded intersection of County Road 515 and County Road 284 (32°39'40.45"N 89°2'4.13"W). The three men were subsequently shot by Jordan and Roberts. Chaney was also beaten and castigated before his death.

After the victims had been shot, they were quickly loaded into their station wagon and transported to Burrage's Old Jolly Farm, located along Highway 21, a few miles southwest of Philadelphia where an earthen dam for a farm pond was under construction.^[25] Tucker was already at the dam waiting for the lynch mob's arrival. Earlier in the day, Burrage, Posey, and Tucker had met at either Posey's gas station or Burrage's garage to discuss these burial details, and Tucker most likely was the one who covered up the bodies using a bulldozer that he owned. An autopsy of Goodman, showing fragments of red clay in his lungs and grasped in his fists, suggests he was probably buried alive alongside the already dead Chaney and Schwerner.^[26]

After all three were buried, Price told the group:

Well, boys, you've done a good job. You've struck a blow for the white man. Mississippi can be proud of you. You've let those agitating outsiders know where this state stands. Go home now and forget it. But before you go, I'm looking each one of you in the eye and telling you this: The first man who talks is dead! If anybody who knows anything about this ever opens his mouth to any outsider about it, then the rest of us are going to kill him just as dead as we killed those three son of bitches [sic] tonight. Does everybody understand what I'm saying? The man who talks is dead, dead, dead!^[27]

Eventually, Tucker was tasked with disposing of the CORE station wagon in Alabama. For reasons unknown, the station wagon was left near a river in northeast Neshoba County along Highway 21. It was soon set ablaze and abandoned.^[citation needed]

Unconvinced by the assurances of the Memphis-based agents, Sullivan elected to wait in Memphis... for the start of the “invasion” of northern students... Sullivan’s instinctive decision to stick around Memphis proved correct. Early Monday morning, June 22, he was informed of the disappearance... he was ordered to Meridian. The town would be his home for the next nine months.

– Cagin & Dray, We Are Not Afraid, 1988^[28]

After reluctance from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover to get directly involved, President Lyndon Johnson convinced him by threatening to send ex-CIA director Allen Dulles in his stead.^[29] FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover initially ordered the FBI Office in Meridian, run by John Proctor, to begin a preliminary search after the three men were reported missing. That evening, U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy escalated the search and ordered 150 federal agents to be sent from New Orleans.^[30] Two local Native Americans found the smoldering car that evening; by the next morning, that information had been communicated to Proctor. Joseph Sullivan of the FBI immediately went to the scene.^[31] By the next day, the federal government had arranged for hundreds of sailors from the nearby Naval Air Station Meridian to search the swamps of Bogu Chitto.

During the investigation, searchers including Navy divers and FBI agents discovered the bodies of Henry Hezekiah Dee and Charles Eddie Moore in the area (the first was found by a fisherman). They were college students who had disappeared in May 1964. Federal searchers also discovered 14-year-old Herbert Oarsby, and the bodies of five other deceased African Americans who were never identified. ^[32]

The disappearance of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner captured national attention. By the end of the first week, all major news networks were covering their disappearances. President Lyndon Johnson met with the parents of Goodman and Schwerner in the Oval Office. Walter Cronkite's broadcast of the CBS Evening News on June 25, 1964, called the disappearances "the focus of the whole country's concern".^[33] The FBI eventually offered a $25,000 reward (equivalent to $209,000 in 2020), which led to the breakthrough in the case. Meanwhile, Mississippi officials resented the outside attention. Sheriff Rainey said, "They're just hiding and trying to cause a lot of bad publicity for this part of the state." Mississippi Governor Paul B. Johnson Jr. dismissed concerns, saying the young men "could be in Cuba".^[34]

The bodies of the CORE activists were found only after an informant (discussed in FBI reports only as "Mr. X") passed along a tip to federal authorities.^[35] They were discovered on August 4, 1964, 44 days after their murder, underneath an earthen dam on Burrage's farm. Schwerner and Goodman had each been shot once in the heart; Chaney, a Black man, had been severely beaten, castrated and shot three times. The identity of "Mr. X" was revealed publicly forty years after the original events, and revealed to be Maynard King, a Mississippi Highway Patrol officer close to the head of the FBI investigation. King died in 1966.^{[36][37]}

In the summer of 1964, according to Linda Schiro and other sources, FBI field agents in Mississippi recruited the mafia captain Gregory Scarpa to help them find the missing civil rights workers.^[38] The FBI was convinced the three men had been murdered, but could not find their bodies. The agents thought that Scarpa, using illegal interrogation techniques not available to agents, might succeed at gaining this information from suspects. Once Scarpa arrived in Mississippi, local agents allegedly provided him with a gun and money to pay for information. Scarpa and an agent allegedly pistol-whipped and kidnapped Lawrence Byrd, a TV salesman and secret Klansman, from his store in Laurel and took him to Camp Shelby, a local Army base. At Shelby, Scarpa severely beat Byrd and stuck a gun barrel down his throat. Byrd finally revealed to Scarpa the location of the three men's bodies.^{[39][40]} The FBI has never officially confirmed the Scarpa story. Though not necessarily contradicting the claim of Scarpa's involvement in the matter, investigative journalist Jerry Mitchell and Illinois high school teacher Barry Bradford claimed that Mississippi highway patrolman Maynard King provided the grave locations to FBI agent Joseph Sullivan after obtaining the information from an anonymous third party. In January 1966, Scarpa allegedly helped the FBI a second time in Mississippi on the murder case of Vernon Dahmer, killed in a fire set by the Klan. After this second trip, Scarpa and the FBI had a sharp disagreement about his reward for these services. The FBI then dropped Scarpa as a confidential informant.^[41]

In a famous eulogy for Chaney, CORE leader Dave Dennis voiced his rage, anguish, and turmoil:^[42]

I blame the people in Washington DC and on down in the state of Mississippi just as much as I blame those who pulled the trigger I'm tired of that! Another thing that makes me even tireder though, that is the fact that we as people here in the state and the country are allowing it to continue to happen. Your work is just beginning. If you go back home and sit down and take what these white men in Mississippi are doing to us.... if you take it and don't do something about it.... then God damn your souls!^{[32][43]} over the activists' deaths to gain passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which Johnson signed on July 2. This and the Selma to Montgomery march-es of 1965 contributed to passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, which Johnson signed on August 6 of that year.

President Johnson and civil rights activists used the outrage

Malcolm X used the delayed resolution of the case in his argument that the federal government was not protecting black lives, and African-Americans would have to defend themselves: “And the FBI head, Hoover, admits that they know who did it, they’ve known ever since it happened, and they’ve done nothing about it. Civil rights bill down the drain.”^{[44][45]}

By late November 1964 the FBI accused 21 Mississippi men of engineering a conspiracy to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner. Most of the suspects were apprehended by the FBI on December 4, 1964.^[46] The FBI detained the following individuals: B. Akin, E. Akin, Arledge, T. Barnette, Burkes, Burrage, Bowers, Harris, Herndon, Killen, Posey, Price, Rainey, Roberts, Sharpe, Snowden, Townsend, Tucker, and Warner. Two individuals who were not interviewed and photographed, H. Barnette and James Jordan, would later confess their roles during the murder.^[47]

Because Mississippi officials refused to prosecute the killers for murder, a state crime, the federal government, led by prosecutor John Doar, charged 18 individuals under 18 U.S.C. §242 and §371 with conspiring to deprive the three activists of their civil rights (by murder). They indicted Sheriff Rainey, Deputy Sheriff Price and 16 other men. A U. S. Commissioner dismissed the charges six days later, declaring that the confession on which the arrests were based was hearsay. One month later, government attorneys secured indictments against the conspirators from a federal grand jury in Jackson. On February 24, 1965, however, Federal Judge William Harold Cox, an ardent segregationist, threw out the indictments against all conspirators other than Rainey and Price on the ground that the other seventeen were not acting “under color of state law.”

In March 1966, the United States Supreme Court overruled Cox and reinstated the indictments. Defense attorneys then made the argument that the original indictments were flawed because the pool of jurors from which the grand jury was drawn contained insufficient numbers of minorities. Rather than attempt to refute the charge, the government summoned a new grand jury and, on February 28, 1967, won reindictments.^[48]

1967 Federal trial[edit]

Main article: United States v. Price

Trial in the case of United States v. Cecil Price, et al., began on October 7, 1967, in the Meridian courtroom of Judge William Harold Cox, the same judge known to be an opponent of the civil rights movement. A jury of seven white men and five white women was selected. Defense attorneys exercised peremptory challenges against all seventeen potential black jurors. A white man, who admitted under questioning by Robert Hauberg, the U.S. Attorney for Mississippi, that he had been a member of the KKK “a couple of years ago,” was challenged for cause, but Cox denied the challenge.

The trial was marked by frequent crises. Star prosecution witness James Jordan cracked under the pressure of anonymous death threats made against him and had to be hospitalized at one point. The jury deadlocked on its decision and Judge Cox employed the “Allen charge” to bring them to resolution. Seven defendants, mostly from Lauderdale County, were convicted. The convictions in the case represented the first ever convictions in Mississippi for the killing of a civil rights worker.^[48]

Those found guilty on October 20, 1967, were Cecil Price, Klan Imperial Wizard Samuel Bowers, Alton Wayne

Roberts, Jimmy Snowden, Billy Wayne Posey, Horace Barnette, and Jimmy Arledge. Sentences ranged from three to ten years. After exhausting their appeals, the seven began serving their sentences in March 1970. None served more than six years. Sheriff Rainey was among those acquitted. Two of the defendants, E.G. Barnett, a candidate for sheriff, and Edgar Ray Killen, a local minister, had been strongly implicated in the murders by witnesses, but the jury came to a dead-lock on their charges and the Federal prosecutor decided not to retry them.

[30] On May 7, 2000, the jury revealed that in the case of Killen, they dead-locked after a lone juror stated she “could never convict a preacher”.[49]

“To many it will always be June 21, 1964, in Philadelphia.”

— Cagin & Dray, We Are Not Afraid, 1988^[50]

For much of the next four decades, no legal action was taken regarding the murders. In 1989, on the 25th anniversary of the murders, the U.S. Congress passed a non-binding resolution honoring the three men; Senator Trent Lott and the rest of the Mississippi delegation refused to vote for it.^[51]

The journalist Jerry Mitchell, an award-winning investigative reporter for Jackson's The Clarion-Ledger, wrote extensively about the case for six years. In the late 20th century, Mitchell had earned fame by his investigations that helped secure convictions in several other high-profile Civil Rights Era murder cases, including the murders of Medgar Evers and Vernon Dahmer, and the 16th Street Baptist Church bombing in Birmingham. In the case of the civil rights workers, Mitchell was aided in developing new evidence, finding new witnesses, and pressuring the state to take action by Barry Bradford,^[52] a high school teacher at Stevenson High School in Lincolnshire, Illinois, and three of his students, Allison Nichols, Sarah Siegel, and Brittany Saltiel.

Bradford later achieved recognition for helping Mitchell clear the name of the civil rights martyr Clyde Kennard.^[53] Together the student-teacher team produced a documentary for the National History Day contest. It presented important new evidence and compelling reasons to reopen the case. Bradford also obtained an interview with Edgar Ray Killen, which helped convince the state to investigate. Partially by using evidence developed by Bradford, Mitchell was able to determine the identity of "Mr. X", the mystery informer who had helped the FBI discover the bodies and end the conspiracy of the Klan in 1964.^[54]

Mitchell's investigation and the high school students' work in creating Congressional pressure, national media attention and

Bradford's taped conversation with Killen prompted action.^[55] In 2004, on the 40th anniversary of the murders, a multi-ethnic group of citizens in Philadelphia, Mississippi, issued a call for justice. More than 1,500 people, including civil rights leaders and Mississippi Governor Haley Barbour, joined them to support having the case re-opened.^{[56][57]}

On January 6, 2005, a Neshoba County grand jury indicted Edgar Ray Killen on three counts of murder. When the Mississippi Attorney General prosecuted the case, it was the first time the state had taken action against the perpetrators of the murders. Rita Bender, Michael Schwerner's widow, testified in the trial.^[58] On June 21, 2005, a jury convicted Killen on three counts of manslaughter; he was described as the man who planned and directed the killing of the civil rights workers.^[59] Killen, then 80 years old, was sentenced to three consecutive terms of 20 years in prison. His appeal, in which he claimed that no jury of his peers would have convicted him in 1964 based on the evidence presented, was rejected by the Supreme Court of Mississippi in 2007.^[60]

On June 20, 2016, Mississippi Attorney General Jim Hood and Van-ita Gupta, top prosecutor for the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Justice Department, announced that there would be no further investigation into the murders. "The evidence has been degraded by memory over time, and so there are no individuals that are living now that we can make a case on at this point," Hood said.^[61]

In culture[edit]

Numerous works portray or refer to the stories of Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner, the aftermath of their murders and subsequent trial, and other related events of that summer.

Film[edit]

- In the 27-minute documentary short, Summer in Mississip-

- The two-part CBS made-for-television movie, Attack on Terror: The FBI vs. the Ku Klux Klan (1975), co-starring Wayne Rogers and Ned Beatty, is based on Don Whitehead's book (Attack on Terror: The F.B.I. Against the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi). Actor Hilly Hicks portrayed "Charles Gilmore", a fictionalized representation of James Chaney, actor Andrew Parks portrayed "Steven Bronson", a fictionalized representation of Andrew Goodman, and actor Peter Strauss portrayed "Ben Jacobs", a fictionalized representation of Schwerner. The sympathetic portrayal of FBI agents in Attack on Terror: The FBI vs. the Ku Klux Klan (1974) and Mississippi Burning (1988) angered civil rights activists, who believed that the Bureau received too much credit for solving the case and too little condemnation for its previous lack of action in regards to civil rights abuses.^[citation needed]
- The feature film Mississippi Burning (1988), Mississippi Burning Official Trailer #1 – Gene Hackman Movie (1988) HD <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SUtIJwfNEtI> starring Willem Da-foe and Gene Hackman, is loosely based on the murders and the ensuing FBI investigation. Goodman is portrayed in the film by actor Rick Zieff and is simply identified as "Passenger". Schwerner, simply identified in the credits as "Goatee", is portrayed in the film by Geoffrey Nauffts.
- The television movie Murder in Mississippi (1990) examines the events leading up to the deaths of the activists. In this film, Blair Underwood again portrays Chaney; Josh Charles portrays Good-man; and Tom Hulce portrays Schwerner.

- The documentary Neshoba (2008) details the murders, the investigation, and the 2005 trial of Edgar Ray Killen. The film features statements by many surviving relatives of the victims, other residents of Neshoba county, and other people connected to the civil rights movement, as well as footage from the 2005 trial.^[73]

- The TV movie, All the Way (HBO, 2016) about the Lyndon B. Johnson Presidency depicted through the 1964 Civil Rights agenda, evokes the implication of the Johnson administration in the investigation around these murders.

Fine art[edit]

- Norman Rockwell depicted the murders in his painting, Murder in Mississippi (1965), to illustrate Charles Morgan's investigative article in Look, titled Southern Justice (June 29, 1965). The article was part of a series on civil rights.^{[74][75]}

Literature[edit]

- The economists Samuel Bowles and Herbert Gintis dedicated their book A Cooperative Species (2011) to Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner.
- In Stephen King's The Dark Tower VI: Song of Susannah (2005), the protagonist Susannah Dean (Odetta) reminisces about her time in Mississippi as a civil rights activist, when she met Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner in Oxford Town. She thinks about making love to James Chaney and singing the song, "Man of Constant Sorrow".
- George Oppen dedicated his poem, "The Book of Job and a Draft of a Poem to Praise the Paths of the Living" (1973), to Schwerner.

- Alice Walker's novel Meridian (1976) portrays issues of the civil rights era.

- Donald E. Westlake dedicated his novel Put a Lid on It (2002) to Schwerner.
- Don Whitehead's nonfiction book, Attack on Terror: The F.B.I. Against the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi (1970), details the events a week before the assassinations and concludes with the Federal trial of the conspirators. The book was adapted as a two-part tele-vision movie in 1975.
- Howard Cruse's graphic novel Stuck Rubber Baby (1995) deals with issues of the civil rights era. After a stare down with a policeman, the protagonist recalls the murders of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner and reflects on the "price that can get exacted when you look bigotry too squarely in the eye" (p. 201).
- Tom Paxton included the tribute song, "Goodman, Schwerner, and Chaney" on his Ain't That News (1965) album.

Music[edit]

Concert drama[edit]

- Pulitzer Prize-winning composer Steven Stucky's evening-long concert drama, August 4, 1964, was based on the events of that date: the discovery of the bodies of the three civil rights workers and the reported attack on two American warships in the Gulf of Tonkin. Commissioned to commemorate the centennial of the birth of Lyndon B. Johnson, it premiered to excellent reviews.^[76]

Songs[edit]

- Richard Fariña's song, "Michael, Andrew and James", performed with Mimi Fariña, was included in their first Vanguard album, Celebrations for a Grey Day (1965).

- Pete Seeger and Frances Taylor wrote the song, “Those Three are On My Mind”, about the murders, to commemorate the three workers.^[77]
- Phil Ochs wrote his song, “Here’s to the State of Mississippi”, about these events and other violations of civil rights that took place in that state.
- Although it was written a year before the murders, Simon & Garfunkel’s song, “He Was My Brother” from Wednesday Morn-ing, 3 A.M. (1964), has become associated with Andrew Good-man, who attended Queens College near the end of Simon’s years at the school. Simon may have known Goodman only slightly, but they shared many friends.^[citation needed]
- The band Flobots’ song, “Same Thing”, asks to bring back Chaney.

my office and tear down the framed photos of Good-man, Chaney, and Schwerner, that I keep on the wall over my desk...”^[78] In a Season 3 episode the case is also referenced.

Television[edit]

- The FBI Files discussed this case in its final episode of season 1, entitled “The True Story of Mississippi Burning”. It aired February 23, 1999.
- The story was a backdrop in at least two first season episodes of the television series American Dreams (2002): “Down the Shore” and “High Hopes”.
- In the Law & Order episode “Chosen”, defense lawyer Randy Dworkin (played by Peter Jacobson) prefaces a speech against affirmative action with the phrase, “Janeane Garofalo herself can storm into

- The murder was among the 10 events that were shown on the History Channel's 10 Days That Unexpectedly Changed America miniseries in April 2006.
- In Mad Men: "Public Relations" (Season 4, Episode 1), Don Draper's date Bethany mentions knowing Andrew Goodman, stating: "The world is so dark right now", and, "Is that what it takes to make things change?" These statements are the first indication of what year Season 4 takes place in.^[citation needed]
- Referenced as backdrop news reports in American Dreams season 1, episodes 21, "Fear Itself", and 24, "High Hopes".
- All the Way, a 2016 HBO film, briefly portrays the kidnapping and murders, and portrays the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in their aftermath.

Audio[edit]

- Season 3 of the CBC podcast, Someone Knows Something, re-volves around the discovery in July 1964 of the bodies of Henry Hezekiah Dee and Charles Eddie Moore, African-American men who had been murdered two months earlier by the Klan, while the FBI was searching for the bodies of the three missing civil rights workers.^[79]

In my humble opinion, It is time we "All respect the sacrifices," of every human being whose death was unjust, and sparked a world cry for justice.

The Hebrews in Egypt, enslaved by their own people because you must have, "The HAVES served by The HAVENOTS."

The North American Indigenous people and the 500 nations. 131 treaties broken by the United States Government.

400 years of oppression inflicted upon African Americans.

6 million Jews in Germany. Fact: the beginning of that movement started by attacking and containing German Jews first, Second, it is believed that Hit-ler was a Jew himself. Scorned by a Jewish girl who rejected him.

Asian Americans in that same war thrown in containment right here in there good old U.S. of A., did not matter that they were strongly represented in the war, and their patriotic duty, was with the same honor you would expect from such an honorable group of HUMAN BEINGS.

Arab and Muslim American persecution after 9 11.

Tupac cares, if don't nobody else care

And uh, I know they like to beat ya down a lot
When you come around the block brothas clown a lot But please don't cry, dry your eyes, never let up Forgive but don't forget, girl keep your head up

And when he tells you you ain't nuttin' don't believe him And if he can't learn to love you, you should leave him 'Cause sista you don't need him

And I ain't tryin' to gas ya up, I just call 'em how I see 'em You know it makes me unhappy (what's that) When brothas make babies, and leave a young mother to be a pappy

And since we all came from a woman
Got our name from a woman and our game from a woman I wonder why we take from our women

Why we rape our women, do we hate our women? I think it's time to kill for our women

Time to heal our women, be real to our

THE RULES FOR BEING HUMAN

HANDED DOWN FROM ANCIENT SANSKRIT

1. YOU WILL RECEIVE A BODY.

You may like it or not, but it will be yours for the entire period round.

2. YOU WILL LEARN LESSONS.

You are enrolled in a full-time, informal school called life. Each day in this school you will have the opportunity to learn lessons. You may like the lessons or think them irrelevant and stupid.

3. THERE ARE NO MISTAKES, ONLY LESSONS.

Growth is a process of trial and error, experimentation. The 'failed' experiments are as much a part of the process as the experiment that ultimately works.

4. A LESSON IS REPEATED UNTIL IT IS LEARNED.

A lesson will be presented to you in various forms until you have learned it, then you can go on the next lesson.

5. LEARNING LESSONS DOES NOT END.

There is no part of life that does not contain its lessons. If you are alive, there are lessons to be learned.

6. 'THERE' IS NO BETTER THAN 'HERE.'

When your 'there' has become 'here', you will simply obtain another 'there' that will, again look better than 'here'.

7. OTHERS ARE MERELY MIRRORS OF YOU.

You cannot love or hate something about another person unless it reflects to you something you love or hate about yourself.

8. WHAT YOU MAKE OF YOUR LIFE IS UP TO YOU.

You have all the tools and resources you need, what you do with them is up to you. The choice is yours.

9. THE ANSWERS LIE INSIDE YOU.

The answers to life's questions lie inside you. All you need to do is look, listen, and trust.

How DNA Works

How DNA works

The defining moment for DNA was the discovery of its structure in 1953. Main functions of DNA, the genetic material that forms chromosomes in a cell nucleus:

Human cell nucleus

Chromosome

When unraveled it consists of double-stranded DNA

DNA

Held together by four chemicals called bases:

A: Adenine T: Thymine
C: Cytosine G: Guanine

Where one strand has "A", the other must have "T"; where one has "C", the other must have "G"

Cell splits

When cell splits to make two cells, strands of DNA come apart

Spare bases

Spare bases

Double helix form

Spare free-floating bases form within the cell are added to the open strands to turn each strand into a full double helix again

Sections of DNA form genes; these contain instructions for making the proteins needed for the body to grow and maintain itself

GENETIC ANALYSIS REVEALS A CLOSE RELATIONSHIP WITH MIDDLE EASTERNERS, NOT CENTRAL AFRICANS.

EXCAVATIONS IN THE ANCIENT CITY OF ABUSIR EL-MELEQ. CREDIT: PETR BONEK/ALAMY

THE TOMBS OF ANCIENT EGYPT HAVE YIELDED GOLDEN COLLARS AND IVORY BRACELETS, BUT ANOTHER TREASURE—HUMAN DNA—HAS PROVED ELUSIVE. NOW, SCIENTISTS HAVE CAPTURED SWEEPING GENOMIC INFORMATION FROM EGYPTIAN MUMMIES. IT REVEALS THAT MUMMIES WERE CLOSELY RELATED TO ANCIENT MIDDLE EASTERNERS, HINT-ING THAT NORTHERN AFRICANS MIGHT HAVE DIFFERENT GENETIC ROOTS FROM PEOPLE SOUTH OF THE SAHARA DESERT.

THE STUDY, PUBLISHED ON 30 MAY IN *NATURE COMMUNICATIONS*¹, INCLUDES DATA FROM 90 MUMMIES BURIED BETWEEN 1380 BC, DURING EGYPT'S NEW KINGDOM, AND AD 425, IN THE ROMAN ERA. THE FINDINGS SHOW THAT THE MUMMIES' CLOSEST KIN WERE ANCIENT FARMERS FROM A REGION THAT INCLUDES PRESENT-DAY ISRAEL AND JORDAN. MODERN EGYPTIANS, BY CONTRAST, HAVE INHERITED MORE OF THEIR DNA FROM CENTRAL AFRICANS.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES AND HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS SUGGEST CLOSE TIES BETWEEN EGYPT AND THE MIDDLE EAST, BUT "IT IS VERY NICE THAT THIS STUDY HAS NOW PROVIDED EMPIRICAL EVIDENCE FOR THIS AT THE GENETIC LEVEL", SAYS EVOLUTIONARY ANTHROPOLOGIST OMER GOKCUMEN OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK AT BUFFALO.

EGYPT'S SEARING CLIMATE AND THE ANCIENT PRACTICE OF EMBALMING BODIES HAS MADE THE RECOVERY OF INTACT GENETIC MATERIAL DAUNTING. THE FIRST DNA SEQUENCES THOUGHT TO BE FROM A MUMMY² WERE PROBABLY THE RESULT OF MODERN CONTAMINATION, AND MANY SCIENTISTS ARE SCEPTICAL³ OF PURPORTED GENETIC INFORMATION ACQUIRED FROM THE MUMMY OF KING TUTANKHAMUN⁴.

THE LATEST ANALYSIS SUCCEEDED BY BYPASSING SOFT TISSUE—OFTEN ABUNDANT IN EGYPTIAN MUMMIES—TO SEEK DNA FROM BONE AND TEETH. RESEARCHERS CAREFULLY SCREENED THE DNA TO RULE OUT CONTAMINATION FROM ANYONE WHO HAD HANDLED THE MUMMIES SINCE THEIR EXCAVATION A CENTURY AGO IN THE ANCIENT TOWN OF ABUSIR EL-MELEQ.

"MORE THAN HALF OF THE MUMMIES WE STUDIED HAD PRETTY DECENT DNA PRESERVATION," SAYS CO-AUTHOR JO-HANNES KRAUSE, A PALAEOGENETICIST AT THE MAX PLANCK INSTITUTE FOR THE SCIENCE OF HUMAN HISTORY IN JENA, GERMANY.

THE TEAM “SUCCEEDS WHERE PREVIOUS STUDIES ON EGYPTIAN MUMMIES HAVE FAILED OR FALLEN SHORT”, SAYS HANNES SCHROEDER, A PALAEOGENETICIST AT THE UNIVERSITY OF COPENHAGEN. NOW, RESEARCHERS CAN HOPE TO ANSWER QUESTIONS SUCH AS WHETHER IMMIGRATION DROVE ANCIENT-EGYPTIAN POPULATION GROWTH, ADDS SONIA ZAKRZEWSKI, A BIOARCHAEOLOGIST AT THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHAMPTON, UK.

THE SCIENTISTS OBTAINED INFORMATION ABOUT VARIATIONS IN MITOCHONDRIAL DNA, WHICH IS PASSED FROM MOTHER TO CHILD, FROM 90 MUMMIES. BECAUSE OF CONTAMINATION, THE TEAM WAS ABLE TO ACQUIRE DETAILED NUCLEAR DNA, WHICH IS INHERITED FROM BOTH PARENTS, FROM ONLY THREE MUMMIES.

BOTH TYPES OF GENOMIC MATERIAL SHOWED THAT ANCIENT EGYPTIANS SHARED LITTLE DNA WITH MODERN SUB-SAHARAN AFRICANS. INSTEAD, THEIR CLOSEST RELATIVES WERE PEOPLE LIVING DURING THE NEOLITHIC AND BRONZE AGES IN AN AREA KNOWN AS THE LEVANT. STRIKINGLY, THE MUMMIES WERE MORE CLOSELY RELATED TO ANCIENT EUROPEANS AND ANATOLIANS THAN TO MODERN EGYPTIANS.

THE RESEARCHERS SAY THAT THERE WAS PROBABLY A PULSE OF SUB-SAHARAN AFRICAN DNA INTO EGYPT ROUGHLY 700 YEARS AGO. THE MIXING OF ANCIENT EGYPTIANS AND AFRICANS FROM FURTHER SOUTH MEANS THAT MODERN EGYPTIANS CAN TRACE 8% MORE OF THEIR ANCESTRY TO SUB-SAHARAN AFRICANS THAN CAN THE MUMMIES FROM ABUSIR EL-MELEQ.

THE NEW DATA CAN'T EXPLAIN WHY THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS WERE SO TIGHTLY ALIGNED WITH PEOPLE FROM THE MIDDLE EAST. WAS IT THE RESULT OF MIGRATION, OR WERE THE STONE AGE HUNTER-GATHERERS OF NORTHERN AFRICA GENETICALLY SIMILAR TO THOSE OF THE LEVANT? IT'S TOO EARLY TO TELL, KRAUSE SAYS, BUT THERE'S A BETTER CHANCE NOW OF GETTING ANSWERS. “THIS IS THE FIRST GLIMPSE OF THE GENETIC HISTORY OF EGYPT,” HE SAYS. “BUT IT'S REALLY JUST THE START.”

HARAOH RAMSES III

2017 BLACKHISTORY938

The researchers say that there was probably a pulse of sub-Saharan African DNA into Egypt roughly 700 years ago. The mixing of ancient Egyptians and Africans from further south means that modern Egyptians can trace 8% more of their ancestry to sub-Saharan Africans than can the mummies from Abusir el-Meleq.

DNA analysis shows Egyptian Pharaoh Rameses III (20th Dynasty) had sub-Saharan African haplogroup E1b1a (now called E-M2)

DNA ANALYSIS RESULTS- QUOTE:

"Genetic kinship analyses revealed identical haplotypes in both mummies (table 1); using the Whit Athey's haplogroup predictor, we determined the Y chromosomal haplogroup E1b1a. The testing of polymorphic autosomal microsatellite loci provided similar results in at least one allele of each marker (table 2)."

HAPLOGROUP E1b1a (now called E-M2) a sub-Saharan African DNA haplogroup: - QUOTE:

"Haplogroup E1b1 now contains two basal branches, E-V38 (E1b1a) and E-M215 (E1b1b), with V38/V100 joining the two previously separated lineages E-M2 (former E1b1a) and E-M329 (former E1b1c). Each of these two lineages has a peculiar geographic distribution. E-M2 is the most common haplogroup in sub-Saharan Africa, with frequency peaks in western (about 80%) and central Africa (about 60%)."

--Trombetta et al 2011. A New Topology of the Human Y Chromosome Haplogroup E1b1 (E-P2) PLoS ONE 6(1): e16073.

A 2012 study done on the mummified remains of Rameses III and his son determined that both y-chromosomes belonged to Haplogroup E1b1a (Y-DNA). The pharaoh's y-chromosome belongs to the most frequent hap-logroup among contemporary Sub-Saharan y-chromosomes. — Wikipedia

The Thuya Gene

One of the autosomal ancestry markers prominent in the Royal Egyptian families of the New Kingdom, this not-so-rare gene is Central African origin and was passed to Thuya from her forebears, Queens of Upper and Lower Egypt and High Priestesses of Hathor, the Mother Goddess. Thuya passed it to her grandson Akhenaten and great-grandson Tutankhamun, among others, as documented in a forensic study of the Amarna mummies by Zahi Hawass, head of the Supreme Council of Antiquities in Cairo, in 2010. Today, its highest incidence is in Somalians at nearly 50%. It is found in 40% of Muslim Egyptians. On average, 1 in 3 Africans or African Americans carries it. It crops up in high concentrations in many places around the world such as the Basque region (41%) and in Melungeons (31%, similar to Middle Easterners), but is present at only low levels in East and South Asia, as well as Native America. Its lowest frequency is in the Chukchi of Siberia (3%).

These East Africans like Ramses III are part of the Subsaharan Nilotic Afro Asiatic race.

The Afroasiatic family (Afro-Asiatic), also known as Afrasian and tradi-tionally as Hamito-Semitic (Chamito-Semitic), is a large language family of about 300 languages and dialects. It includes languages spoken predominant-ly in West Asia, North Africa, the Horn of Africa and parts of the Sahel.

The above shows exactly what is proven by the bible and the people of Africa. The Afro Asiatic race is a mix of Ham and Shem. They are African and Asian and originated in Africa before Israel was cut off as the middle east. Hamito-Semitic (Chamito-Semitic), Israel was and is North Africa. The Suez Canal is man made to separate the land from Africa.

Hebrew Israelite DNA Haplogroup
Haplogroup E1B1A

This haplogroup is found predominantly among Bantu (Negro) descendants to include but not limited to The African Lemba, Many West African Tribes, Igbo Jews, Yoruba Jews, African Americans, West Indians, Brazilians, Haitians and other Negro influenced races throughout the Caribbean and scattered across all different Nations. Contrary to false DNA reporting, this is not a Sub Saharan or Hamitic Haplogroup, it is Semitic in origin. Negroes have been identified as being exempt from the bloodline of Ham per The Zondervan Compact Bible Dictionary. This Haplogroup represents the Y-DNA of Jacob, the father of the 12 Tribes of Israel. - Dr. Yohua Ben Ephraim Haplogroup E-V38 is a human Y-chromosome DNA haplogroup. It is primarily distributed in Africa. E-V38 has two basal branches, E-M329 (formerly E1b1c) and E-M2 (formerly E1b1a). The E-M329 subclade is today almost exclusively found in Ethiopia. E-M2 is the predominant sub-clade in Western Africa, Central Africa, Southern Africa and the African Great Lakes, and occurs at moderate frequencies in North Africa and Mid-dle East. E-M2 has several subclades, but many of these sub haplogroups are included in either E-L485 or E-U175.

The Tutsi Jews, named after the Hebrew syntagm תַּתְּסֵה "təṭse" [those who will go forth] are a renowned nomadic and semi-nomadic agro-pastoralist people of Eastern and Central Africa, also called the Great Lakes or Kingdoms of the Mountains of the Moon. From the local Judeo-kushite Hebrew denomination "B'Sh-(em)-oez" or "BaCwezi", (Those who originated from the strength of the Name) the name "Mountains of the Moon" was given to the Tutsi Jewish Kingdoms by the Geographer, Mathematician and Astronomer, Rabbi Marinus of Tyre, one among many Talmudic scholars who used to visit the Tutsi Jewish Kingdoms of the Great Lakes and to learn as much as they could from the scientists and the Torah scholars of that long established Jewish nation (See: Lettre d'Aristée A Philocrate, 1213. Traduction et Notes, index complet des mots grecs par André Pelletier, ed. Du Cerf, Paris, 1962)

During the period from Pompey to Julius, it has been estimated that over 1,000,000 Jews fled into Africa, fleeing from Roman persecution and slavery. The slave markets were full of black Jewish slaves.

Famous E1b1a individuals

Zahi Hawass et al. (2012) tested the remains of Ramesses III ^{CS}, the second pharaoh of Egypt's 20th dynasty. Based on 13 STR markers tested his haplogroup can be assigned as E1b1a. The 20th Dynasty of Egypt (1189-1077 BCE) started with Setnakhte and counted nine kings named Ramesses, from III to XI. The pharaohs are buried in the Valley of the Kings.

The Origins Centre at the University of the Witwatersrand tested the DNA of Nelson Mandela ^{CS} (1918-2013), the famous South African anti-apartheid revolutionary politician and philanthropist, who served as President of South Africa from 1994 to 1999, and determined that he belonged to haplogroup E1b1a.

The Semitic languages are a branch of the Afroasiatic language family originating in the Middle East.

(Afroasiatic languages have over 495 million native speakers, the fourth largest number of any language family (after Indo-European, Sino-Tibetan and Niger-Congo). The phylum has six branches: Ber-ber, Chadic, Cushitic, Egyptian, Omotic and Semitic. By far the most widely spoken Afroasiatic language or dialect continuum is Arabic.

A de facto group of distinct language varieties within the Semitic branch, the languages that evolved from Proto-Arabic have around 313 million native speakers, concentrated primarily in West Asia and North Africa.) In addition to languages spoken today, Afroasiatic includes several important ancient languages, such as Ancient Egyptian, which forms a distinct branch of the family, and Akkadian, Biblical Hebrew and Old Aramaic, all of which are from the Semitic branch. The original homeland of the Afroasiatic family, and when the parent language (i.e. Proto-Afroasiatic) was spoken, are yet to be agreed upon by historical linguists. Proposed locations include the Horn of Africa, North Africa, the Eastern Sahara and

A Description of the Afro-Asiatic (Hamito-Semitic) Language Family Cory D. Crawford

Linguistics 450

Dr. Hallen In contrast to the Indo-European Language Family, about which much research has been done over the past two centuries, relatively little is known about the former Hamito-Semitic Language Family, now known as the Afro-Asiatic Family. (While much research has been accomplished with the Semitic Languages because of Arabic and Hebraic religious ties, little has been done with the Afro-Asiatic family as a whole.) This paper will describe this language family as is current with modern scholarly thought, and will also acknowledge current research having to do with the Afro-Asiatic Family. This family spreads itself over the northern third of Africa and into western Asia (also known as the Near East), and 175 million people speak languages that belong to this family (Ruhlen 1987:86). It is thought to be the parent of at least 250 languages (Bomhard and Kearns 1994:24). The name Hamito-Semitic was applied to describe the two main phyla (Hamitic and Semitic) that philologists of African languages connected in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The Hamitic branch included Ancient Egyptian (an extinct language known as Coptic in its final stages), Berber, and Cushitic, while the Semitic branch included the well-documented Arabic, Hebrew, and Akkadian. (More will be said about these phyla shortly.) In 1949 American linguist Joseph H. Greenberg drew different lines in Afro-Asiatic classification. He showed that the Hamitic languages did not bear enough resemblance to be classified as one subgroup, but that each of the three (Egyptian, Berber, and Cushitic) constituted its own subgroup. Thus the name 'Hamitic' was no longer valid and possibly racist (Ruhlen 1987:82). He therefore coined "Afro-Asiatic" as the name for this family. It included the six groups Ancient Egyptian, Omotic, Cushitic, Semitic, Berber, and Chadic, found on the following map:(Fig. 1 Afro-Asiatic Language Family, Adapted from Ruhlen 1987.)

L0 is found most commonly in the Sub-Saharan Africa. It reaches its highest frequency in the Khoisan people at 73%. Some of the higher frequencies are: Namibia (IXun) 79%, South Africa (IKhwa/IXun) 83%, and Botswana (IKung) 100%. Haplogroup L0d is the most divergent ("ancient") haplogroup of global mitochondrial DNA haplogroups. It is found at highest frequencies in the Khoisan groups of Southern Africa. L0d is also commonly found in the Coloured population of South Africa and frequencies range from 60% to 71%. This illustrates the massive maternal contribution of Khoisan people to the Coloured population of South Africa. Haplogroups L0k is the second most common haplogroup in the Khoisan groups (following L0d) and is largely restricted to the Khoisan. Interestingly, while the Khoisan associated L0d haplogroup were found in high frequencies in the Coloured population of South Africa, L0k were not observed in two studies involving large groups of Coloured individuals.

Extending through the heart of Africa, the vast region now inhabited by the Bantu was the stage for one of the greatest migrations in human history. In time, that migration would become the seedbed for a broad family of related ethnic groups and languages that would wield enormous influence on the ancient and contemporary history of Africa: from kingdoms and trade networks to colonial independence movements and Nobel Prize-winning leaders.

Bantu peoples is used as a general label for the 300–600 ethnic groups in Africa who speak Bantu languages. They inhabit a geographical area stretching east and southward from Central Africa across the African Great Lakes region down to Southern Africa.] Bantu is a major branch of the Ni-ger-Congo language family spoken by most populations in Africa. There are about 650 Bantu languages by the criterion of mutual intelligibility, though the distinction between language and dialect is often unclear, and Ethnologue counts 535 languages. Bantu peoples is used as a general label for the 300–600 ethnic groups in Africa who speak Bantu languages. Bantu is a major branch of the Niger-Congo language family spoken by most populations in Africa. There are about 650 Bantu languages by the criterion of mutual intelligibility, though the distinction between language and dialect is often unclear, and Ethnologue counts 535 languages.

Around 3,000 years ago, speakers of the Proto-Bantu language group began a millennia-long series of migrations eastward from their homeland between West Africa and Central Africa, at the border of eastern Nigeria and Cameroon. This Bantu expansion first introduced Bantu peoples to central, southern and southeastern Africa, regions they had previously been absent from. The proto-Bantu migrants in the process assimilated and/or displaced a number of earlier inhabitants that they came across, such as Pygmy and Khoisan populations in the center and south, respectively. They also encountered some Afro-Asiatic outlier groups in the southeast who had been there for centuries, having migrated from Northeast

The earliest Bantu people arose in modern-day Cameroon and Nigeria. A Neolithic people who farmed yams and oil palms (but not grains), they lived on the edges of forests where resources were richer and they could supplement their diet with bushmeat. No archaeological evidence of metallurgy appears in the region, but a stable and somewhat varied food supply led to population growth and expansion to the east and the south.

The Eastern Bantu acquired grains and learned how to grow them as they migrated east toward the Great Lakes region—modern-day Uganda, Kenya and Tanzania. There they learned how to smelt iron and make a kind of steel. The combined assets of reliable tools and the addition of cereals to the simple farming and herding skills they had practiced in Cameroon and Nigeria gave rise to large communities. Growing populations—and the mobility that herding, farming and metalsmithing provided—kept Bantu groups moving south and, in some cases, back west toward the Atlantic Ocean.

The Western Bantu are part of the same great swath of Bantu who inhabit eastern and southern Africa. They moved south from Cameroon along the west coast of Africa in the same time frame as the Eastern Bantu (beginning about 1000 B.C.), ending up in what we know today as Angola and Namibia. As some groups moved deeper into central Africa's rainforests and riverine environments, they added fishing to their skills.

Human origins & migrations

You've probably heard the claim that Africa is 'the birthplace of humanity'. But before there were humans, or even apes, or even ape ancestors, there was...rock. Africa is the oldest and most enduring landmass in the world. When you stand on African soil, 97% of what's under your feet has been in place for more than 300 million years. During that time, Africa has seen pretty much everything – from proto-bacteria to dinosaurs and finally, around five to 10 million years ago, a special kind of ape called Australo-pithecines, that branched off (or rather let go of the branch), and walked on two legs down a separate evolutionary track.

This radical move led to the development of various hairy, dim-witted hominids (early men) – Homo habilis around 2.4 million years ago, Homo erectus some 1.8 million years ago and finally Homo sapiens (modern hu-mans) around 200,000 years ago. Around 50,000 years later, somewhere in Tanzania or Ethiopia, a woman was born who has become known as 'mitochondrial Eve'. We don't know what she looked like, or how she lived her life, but we do know that every single human being alive today (yup, that's EVERYONE) is descended from her. So at a deep genetic level, we're all still Africans.

of North Africa, along the shores of the Mediterranean and into the Middle East. From this inauspicious start came a population that would one day cover almost every landmass on the globe.

Around the time that people were first venturing outside the continent, hunting and gathering was still the lifestyle of choice; humans lived in communities that rarely exceeded a couple of hundred individuals, and social bonds were formed to enable these small bands of people to share food resources and hunt co-operatively. With the evolution of language, these bonds blossomed into the beginnings of society and culture as we know it today.

The first moves away from the nomadic hunter-gatherer way of life came between 14,000 BC and 9500 BC, a time when rainfall was high, and the Sahara and North Africa became verdant. It was in these green and pleasant lands that the first farmers were born, and mankind learned to cultivate crops rather than following prey animals from place to place.

By 2500 BC the rains began to fail and the sandy barrier between North and West Africa became the Sahara we know today. People began to move southwest into the rainforests of Central Africa. By this time a group of people speaking the same kind of languages had come to dominate the landscape in Africa south of the Sahara. Known as the Bantu, their populations grew as they discovered iron-smelting technology and developed new agricultural techniques. By 100 BC, Bantu peoples had reached East Africa; by AD 300 they were living in southern Africa, and the age of the African empires had begun.

Recent research published in the October 2017 issue of American Journal of Human Genetics found that genomes of modern human groups originating outside Africa contain between 1.8 and 2.6 percent Neanderthal DNA. “Neanderthal DNA is one source of variation for many traits in modern humans,” study lead author Michael Dannemann, a computational biologist at the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology in Leipzig, Germany, told Live Science. [Your Hair Color and Sleep Habits May Come from Neanderthals]

Another 2017 study by author Kay Prüfer, a paleo geneticist at the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology in Leipzig, Germany, found that modern-human DNA entered the Neanderthal gene pool between 130,000 and 145,000 years ago. [You May Be More ‘Neanderthal’ Than You Thought]

The original cave men

Neanderthals lived during the Ice Age. They often took shelter from the ice, snow and otherwise unpleasant weather in Eurasia’s plentiful lime-stone caves. Many of their fossils have been found in caves, leading to the popular idea of them as “cave men.”

Like other humans, Neanderthals originated in Africa but migrated to Eurasia long before other humans did. Neanderthals lived across Eur-asia, as far north and west as the British Isles, through part of the Middle East,

Now some try to claim North and East African and Middle Eastern people are a Caucasian race and the Egyptians were white. No! The first humans were black. The European looking Egyptians arrived later. Those ancient white Egyptian bodies that have been found are from the descendants of African's who left black and populated the world some mixing with Neanderthals and moving to cold countries. When the Assyrians, Turks, Romans entered or reentered Egypt they returned Caucasian and are not the original inhabitants of the land. The first people to populate the Mediterranean and America's were black. Civilization started in Africa and Egypt was part of Africa. Africa is the Spirit of the blacks. The black land has been targeted due to the wisdom and knowledge within it. The world refuses to admit that black people, the first on earth, could possibly create all that they did. Some would prefer to think Caucasians or Aliens made the Pyramids than to admit that it was Africans in their own land.

The head has become the tail.

Talk: Ramesses III

A study in Nature, titled Ancient Egyptian mummy genomes suggest an increase of Sub-Saharan African ancestry in post-Roman periods They object to the categorical dismissal of PCR testing, and point out that “PCR based methods were used successfully on mummified Egyptian cats and crocodiles without creating extensive debate.” They point out that to the authors, only Sub-Saharan African is counted as African, while Lower and Upper Nile Valley DNA is not. The authors classify mtDNA hap-logroup M1 as ‘Asian’, even though it occurs extensively in East Africa, and came from L3. They don’t seem to classify L3 as African either, considering it was already present in the pre-Ptolemaic and Ptolemaic categories in their own study (see Figure 3 a), yet they only notice the increase in L0, L1 and L2 in the modern population. That is, an increase compared to the extremely limited sample size and singular location in northern Egypt. This is no basis for the rejection of the DNA Tribes’ findings from Wiki-pedia. Nature: Ancient Egyptian mummy genomes suggest an increase of Sub-Saharan African ancestry in post-Roman periods. Response: Ancient Egyptian Genomes from northern Egypt: Further discussion.

Keita and Anselin mention numerous other problems with the study and the authors’ interpretation of their data:

1) Sampling and methodological strategy

2) The samples cannot be convincingly said to represent true breeding populations or those that truly integrate historical information.

3) On the Definition of African “Schuenemann et al.¹ seem to implicitly suggest that only SSA equals Africa and that there are no interconnections between the various regions of Africa not rooted in the slave trade, a favorite trope.”

They continue:

“ It is not clear why there is an emphasis on ‘sub-Saharan’ when no Saharan or supra-Saharan population 4 samples—empirical or modelled—are considered; furthermore, there is no one way to be “sub-Saharan.” In this study northern tropical Africans, such as lower and upper Nubians and adjacent southern Egyptians and Saharans were not included as comparison groups, as noted by the authors themselves.”

That’s for the study in Nature. Ironically...

There was a study that states that it is the Arabic component of the Nile Valley population, that arrived late, specifically with the Arab expansion after the fall of the Roman Empire.

(PLOS Genetics) Northeast African genomic variation shaped by the continuity of indigenous groups and Eurasian migrations: “We investigate genomic diversity of northeast African populations and found a clear bimodal distribution of variation, correlated with geography, and likely driven by Eurasian admixture in the wake of migrations along the Nile. This admixture process largely coincides with the time of the Arab conquest, spreading in a southbound direction along the Nile and the Blue Nile. Nilotic populations occupying the region around the White Nile show long-term continuity, genetic isolation and genetic links to ancestral East African people. Compared to current times, groups that are ancestral to the current-day Nilotes likely inhabited a larger area of north-east Africa prior to the migration from the Middle East as their ancestry component can still be found in a large area.” In Figure 2, you can see that the modern Egyptians admixture the same as the Palestinians, Druze and Bedouins; that the Nubians, Beja, (Sudanese) Arabs admixture in the same way; that the Dinka, Nuer and Shilluk and other Nilotes admixture in the same way; and that the Horn of Africa Somalis, Afar, Tigrayans, Oromo admixture the same way. Light Green is European, Orange is Sub-Saharan African/Yoruba, Dark Blue is Nilotic, Pink is Horn of Africa.

A third study, (NATURE) The genetics of East African populations: a Nilo-Saharan component in the African genetic landscape, shows this even more clearly in Figure 3. At steps K=2 to K=5, there are 5 main components: Dark Blue (Arabic or Modern Qatari and Modern Egyptian), Light Blue (Sub-Saharan African/Yoruba), Light Green (Nilotic or southern Nile Valley), Dark Green (northern Nile Valley and Ethiopia) and Pink (Saharan). Notice that the dark blue Arabic (Qatar, Modern Egyptian) component decreases with distance farther south. Notice that Qataris, Egyptians and Copts admixture the same way except that the Copts have this Nilotic element showing up in K=3, after which they admixture more like the northern Nile Valley group of Beja, Nubians, Sudanese Arabs and Ethiopians. The Nilotes, Nuba and Darfurians have this big Sub-Saharan African/ Yoruba element at K=2, and a huge Nilotic element from K=3 and on. 83.84.100.133 (talk)(08:14, 6 October 2019 (UTC))

Ramses III, Tutankhamon, Amenhotep III, Tiye and Pentawere's haplogroups and STRS are Black African

According to the BMJ, Ramses III's haplogroup is E1b1a.

According to DNA Tribes, their STRs match most closely with people today living in Southern Africa, the African Great Lakes (Malawi, Tanzania) and Tropical West Africa (Benin). All in a neat collage: Ramses III. Tutankhamun, Tiye, Amenhotep III and more. Notice that ALL the Amarna dynasty mummies STRs cluster most closely to Southern Africa, African Great Lakes and Tropical West Africa. Not one clusters most closely with Mediterranean or Arabian. 83.84.100.133 (talk) 22:41, (4 July 2019 (UTC))

Here's my reply to this editor elsewhere, it's applicable here: "All we need is academic studies discussing the genetic history of Egypt. I don't know if you are a new person or one of the many sock and meat pup-pets suggesting this, but in any case neither you nor any of them have come up with any making the argument you want to make. Note that I don't care if his father was an Inuit or a Zulu, I'm just interested in the academic integrity of this article." Doug Weller talk 15:26, (5 July 2019 (UTC))

Exactly. PUT IT BACK. NOW Allanana79 (talk) 22:47, 23 April 2019 (UTC)

Agreed. And you know who is doing this again—Doug Weller.

And I'll show you exactly why this section and others that show the genes of the Ramses III and his relatives. From a video called "Brits Take A DNA Test". When Alexander von Wurthenau can see that Tutankhamon is Black, long before his DNA test came back from DNA Tribes, or his relative Ramses III and his son's haplogroup E1b1a was published in the British Medical Journal. What a difference an honest mind makes. "The features of this Egyptian King [Tutankhamun], whose mother was of pure Black stock, are almost as Negroid as the ones of his captured Nubian enemies." — Al-exander von Wurthenau. (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NyWT_l3dNZ4 83.84.100.133) (talk) 04:31, 19 May 2019 (UTC)

Note There is more out there, but hopefully this is enough to show, in my opinion, we are 1 people.
At the very least; we are more alike than we give credit.*

Egyptian Gods And Goddesses

Gods of Egypt

The ancient Egyptians worshipped over 1,400 different gods and goddess-es in their shrines, temples, and homes. These deities were the center of a religion lasting over three thousand years!

Many of the Egyptian gods and goddesses were anthropomorphic, which means that they were usually depicted as part human and part ani-mal. Can you think of anything that might be anthropomorphic?

Each deity was responsible for a certain part of daily life or the world around the Egyptians. For example, the ibis-headed Thoth was the god of writing and knowledge, while the falcon-headed Horus was god of kingship.

Keeping all of these gods and goddesses happy was hard work and re-quired daily rituals to be performed in temples across Egypt. Food, water, in-cense, and precious materials would be offered to the deities in their temples everyday by groups of priests acting on behalf of the Pharaoh. Sometimes, even the Pharaoh would be worshipped as a god in their own right.

Egyptian Gods – The Complete List

Article

by Joshua J. Mark published on 14 April 2016

Available in other languages: Persian, French

The gods and goddesses of Ancient Egypt were an integral part of the people's everyday lives. It is not surprising then that there were over 2,000 deities in the Egyptian pantheon. Some of these deities' names are well known: Isis, Osiris, Horus, Amun, Ra, Hathor, Bastet, Thoth, Anubis, and Ptah while many others less so.

The more famous gods became state deities while others were asso-ciated with a specific region or, in some cases, a ritual or role. The god-dess Qebhet, for example, is a little known deity who offered cool water to the souls of the dead as they awaited judgment in the afterlife, and Ses-hat was the goddess of written words and specific measurements overshadowed by Thoth, the better known god of writing and patron of scribes.

Ancient Egyptian culture grew out of an understanding of these dei-ties and the vital role they played in the immortal journey of every human being. Historian Margaret Bunson writes:

The numerous gods of Egypt were the focal points of the nation's cultic rites and personal religious practices. They also played a part in the great mortuary rituals and in the Egyptian belief in posthumous eternal bliss. (98) The gods evolved from an animistic belief system to one which was highly anthropomorphic and imbued with magic. Heka was the god of magic and medicine but was also the primordial force, pre-dating all the other gods, who enabled the act of creation and sustained both mortal and divine life. The central value of the Egyptian culture was ma'at - harmony and balance—represented by the goddess of the same name and her white ostrich feather, and it was Heka who empowered Ma'at just as he did all the other deities. Heka was the manifestation of Heka (magic) which should be understood to be natural laws which today would be considered supernatural but, to the Egyptians, were simply how the world and the universe functioned. The gods provided people with all good gifts but it was Heka which allowed them to do so.

<https://youtu.be/QvZxqD4e4iU>

These gods all had names, individual personalities and characteristics, wore different kinds of clothing, held different objects as sacred, presided over their own domains of influence, and reacted in highly individualistic ways to events. Each deity had their own area of expertise but were often associated with several spheres of human life.

Hathor, for example, was a goddess of music, dancing, and drunken-ness but was also understood as an ancient Mother Goddess, also associated with the Milky Way as a divine reflection of the Nile River, and, in her earlier incarnation as Sekhmet, as a destroyer. The goddess Neith was originally a war goddess who became the epitome of the Mother Goddess, a nurturing figure, to whom the gods would turn to settle their disputes. Many gods and goddesses, such as Set or Serket, transformed through time to take on other roles and responsibilities.

These transformations were sometimes dramatic, as in the case of Set who went from a hero protector-god to a villain and the world's first murderer. Serket was almost certainly an early Mother Goddess, and her later role as protector against venomous creatures (especially scorpions) and guardian of women and children reflects those characteristics. Bunson writes:

The Egyptians had no problem with a multitude of gods and they seldom shelved old deities in favor of new ones. Characteristics and roles of various gods were syncretized to reconcile differing religious beliefs, customs, or ideals. For political and religious reasons, for example, the Theban god Amun, who was considered the most powerful deity in the New King-dom, was united with Ra, a sun god whose cult dated to the beginnings of Egypt. Worship of the gods of Egypt evolved over time as large cults developed on a local and then on a national scale. (99)

The following list of the gods and goddesses of ancient Egypt is derived from numerous works on the subject which follow below in the bibliography. Every attempt has been made to create a comprehensive listing but minor regional deities have been omitted if their role seems uncertain or they were transformed into major gods. When a major god evolved from an earlier minor deity, it is noted.

Included also are concepts, such as The Field of Reeds or Lily Lake, which were regions in the afterlife associated with the gods. The definitions of the god's characteristics and the roles they played are synthesized for clarity but it should be noted that not every deity listed was understood in the same way throughout Egypt's long history. Osiris, for example, was most likely a fertility god in the Predynastic Period of Egypt (c. 6000-3150 BCE) but was already understood as the First King by the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) and was the most popular god in Egypt during the time of the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE) at the same time that Amun was considered King of the Gods. Although these developments are sometimes noted below, the gods are generally described in the roles they were best known for at the peak of their popularity.

A'ah - An early moon god who evolved into Iah (also known as Yah) where he was and, eventually, Khonsu.

Aken - Custodian of the boat which ferried souls across Lily Lake to the Field of Reeds in the afterlife. He slept until he was needed by Hraf-Hef, the surly Divine Ferryman. His name only appears in the Book of the Dead.

Aker - The deified horizon, guardian of the eastern and western horizons of the afterlife. He protected the sun barge of Ra as it entered and left the underworld at dusk and dawn.

Am-Heh - A god in the underworld, “devourer of millions” and “eater of eternity” who lived in a lake of fire.

Amenet (Amentet) - A goddess who welcomed the dead to the afterlife with food and drink. Known as “She of the West”, Amenet was the consort of the Divine Ferryman. She lived in a tree near the gates of the under-world. Daughter of Hathor and Horus.

Ammit (Ammut) - “Devourer of Souls”, a goddess with the head of a crocodile, torso of a leopard, and hindquarters of a hippo. She sat beneath the scales of justice in the Hall of Truth in the afterlife and devoured the hearts of those souls which were not justified by Osiris.

Amun (Amun-Ra) - God of the sun and air. One of the most powerful and popular gods of ancient Egypt, patron of the city of Thebes, worshipped as part of the Theban Triad of Amun, Mut, and Khonsu. Su-preme king of the gods in some periods, though originally a minor fertility god. By the time of the New Kingdom he was considered the most pow-erful god in Egypt and his worship bordered on monotheism. Other gods were even considered mere aspects of Amun at this time. His priesthood was the most powerful in Egypt and the position of God's Wife of Amun, given to royal women, almost on par with that of the pharaoh.

Amunhotep (Amenhotep), Son of Hapu—God of healing and wisdom. Along with Hardedef and Imhotep, one of the few human beings deified by the Egyptians. He was the royal architect of Amunhotep III (1386-1353 BCE). He was considered so wise that, after death, he became de-ified. He had a major temple in western Thebes and a healing center at Deir el-Bahri.

Amunet—The female counterpart of Amun, member of the Ogdoad.

Anat—Goddess of fertility, sexuality, love, and war. She was originally from Syria or Canaan. In some texts she is referred to as the Mother of the Gods while in others she is a virgin and, in still others, sensuous and erotic, described as the most beautiful goddess. In one version of The Con-tendings of Horus and Set, she is given as a consort to Set at the suggestion of the goddess Neith. Often equated with Aphrodite of Greece, Astarte of Phoenicia, Inanna of Mesopotamia, and Sauska of the Hittites.

Anta—An aspect of the Mother Goddess Mut worshipped at Tanis as the consort of Amun.

Andjety—Early god of fertility associated with the city of Busiris (Andjet). His name means “He who is from Andjet” associated with the djed sym-bol. He eventually was absorbed by Osiris and his name became associated with that deity.

Anhur (Han-her)—Also known as Onuris by the Greeks. God of war and patron of the Egyptian army. See Onuris.

Anqet (Anukit or Anuket)—Goddess of fertility and the cataract of the Nile River at Aswan.

Anti—A Hawk god of Upper Egypt sometimes associated with Anat.

Anubis—God of the dead associated with embalming. Son of Nephthys and Osiris, father of Qebhet. Anubis is depicted as a man with the head of a dog or jackal carrying a staff. He guided the souls of the dead to the Hall of Truth and was part of the ritual of the Weighing of the Heart of the Soul in the afterlife. He was probably the original God of the Dead before that role was given to Osiris, at which time he was made Osiris' son.

Anuke— A war goddess originally and one of the oldest deities of Egypt, sometimes consort of Anhur, god of war. She came to be associated with Nephthys and, to a lesser degree, Isis and is referred to in some texts as their younger sister. Early depictions show her in battle dress with bow and arrow but she was transformed into a Mother Goddess and nurturing figure. The Greeks associated her with Hestia.

Apedemak— A war god depicted as a lion, originally thought to be from Nubia.

Apep (Apophis)— Apep, the celestial serpent assaulted the sun barge of Ra every night as it made its way through the underworld toward the dawn. Gods and the justified dead would help Ra fend the serpent off. The ritual known as Overthrowing of Apophis was performed in temples to help the gods and departed souls protect the barge and ensure the coming of day. Apis— The Divine Bull worshipped at Memphis as an incarnation of the god Ptah. One of the earliest gods of ancient Egypt depicted on the Narm-er Palette (c. 3150 BCE). The Apis Cult was one of the most important and long-lived in the history of Egyptian culture.

Arensnuphis— Companion to the goddess Isis and worshipped primarily at her sacred site at Philae. He was depicted as a lion or a man with a feath-ered headdress. Originally from Nubia.

Asclepius (Aesculapius)—A god of healing of the Greeks also worshipped in Egypt at Saqqara and identified with the deified Imhotep. His symbol, possibly derived from the god Heka, was a staff with a serpent entwined about it, associated in the modern day with healing and the medical profession, known as the Rod of Asclepius.

Ash (As)—God of the Libyan desert, a kindly deity who provided the oasis for travelers.

Astarte—Phoenician goddess of fertility and sexuality, often closely equated with Aphrodite of the Greeks, Inanna/Ishtar of Mesopotamia, and Sauska of the Hittites; referred to as Queen of Heaven. In Egyptian mythology, she is given as a consort to Set, along with Anat, by the goddess Neith.

Aten - The sun disk, originally a sun deity who was elevated by pharaoh Akhenaten (1353-1336 BCE) to the position of sole god, creator of the universe.

Atum (Ra) - The sun god, supreme lord of the gods, first god of the En-nead (tribunal of nine gods), creator of the universe and human beings. Atum (Ra) is the first divine being who stands on the primordial mound in the midst of chaos and draws on the magical forces of Heka to create all the other gods, human beings, and life on earth.

Auf (Efu-Ra) - An aspect of Atum (Ra).

B

Ba'al - Storm god originally from Phoenicia. His name means "Lord" and he was a major deity in Canaan only worshipped in Egypt in the later period of the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE).

Ba'alat Gebal - Phoenician goddess of the city of Byblos, a protector deity, incorporated into Egyptian worship through her association with papyrus, which came from Byblos.

Babi (Baba) - He was a virility god depicted as a baboon and symbolizing male sexuality.

Banebdjedet - A fertility/virility god who appears as a ram or a man with a ram's head, associated with the city of Mendes, eventually another name for Osiris.

Ba-Pef - God of terror, specifically spiritual terror. His name translates as "that soul". He lived in the House of Woe in the afterlife and was known to afflict the king of Egypt. He was never worshipped with a temple but a Cult of Ba-Pef existed to help appease the god and protect the king.

Bastet (Bast) - The beautiful goddess of cats, women's secrets, childbirth, fertility, and protector of the hearth and home from evil or misfortune. She was the daughter of Ra and closely associated with Hathor. Bastet was one of the most popular deities of ancient Egypt. Men and women revered her equally and carried talismans of her cult. She was so universally adored that, in 525 BCE, the Persians used the Egyptian devotion to Bastet to their advantage in winning the Battle of Pelusium. They painted images of Bastet on their shields and drove animals in front of their army knowing the Egyptians would rather surrender than offend their goddess. She is depicted as a cat or a woman with a cat's head, and her major cult center was at Bubastis.

Bat - An early cow goddess associated with fertility and success. She is one of the oldest Egyptian goddesses dating from the early Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE). Bat is depicted as a cow or a woman with cow ears and horns and is most probably the image at the top of the Narmer Palette (c. 3150 BCE) as she was associated with the king's success. She blessed people with success owing to her ability to see both past and future. Eventually, she was absorbed by Hathor who took on her characteristics.

Bennu - An avian deity better known as the Bennu Bird, the divine bird of creation and inspiration for the Greek Phoenix. The Bennu Bird was closely associated with Atum, Ra, and Osiris. It was present at the dawn of creation as an aspect of

would not be included in creation. It was associated with Osiris through the imagery of rebirth as the bird was closely connected to the sun which died each night and rose again the next morning.

Bes (Aha or Bisu) - God of childbirth, fertility, sexuality, humor, and war, popularly known as the Dwarf god. He is one of the most popular gods in Egyptian history who protected women and children, fended off evil, and fought for divine order and justice. He is often represented as more of a spirit (a 'demon', though not at all in the modern-day understanding of that word) than a deity but was worshipped as a god and featured on a number of everyday items in the homes of the Egyptians such as furniture, mirrors, and knife handles. His consort was Taweret, the hippopotamus goddess of childbirth and fertility. Bes is depicted as a bearded dwarf with large ears, prominent genitals, bow-legged, and shaking a rattle. He is always shown in a front-facing position of protection watching over his charges.

Beset - The female aspect of Bes invoked in ceremonial magic. As a protective god, Bes also fended off dark magic, ghosts, spirits, and demons. His feminine aspect was called on to combat these forces.

Buchis - Aspect of the Ka (life force/astral self) of the god Montu in the form of a live bull. Depicted as a bull running.

Cavern Deities - A group of nameless gods who lived in caverns in the underworld and punished the wicked and helped the souls of the justified dead. They are mentioned in Spell 168 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead and are represented as serpents or serpent-like. The spell is popularly known as 'Spell of the Twelve Caves' and makes mention of offerings which should be left for them. The people of Egypt would leave bowls of offerings by caves for them.

Celestial Ferryman (Hraf-haf) - “He Who Looks Behind Him”, the surly boatman who ferried the souls of the justified dead across Lily Lake to the shores of paradise in the Field of Reeds. Hraf-haf was rude and unpleasant, and the soul had to find some way to be courteous in response in order to reach paradise. Hraf-haf is depicted as a man in a boat with his head facing behind him.

Dedun - A protector god of resources, specifically of goods coming from Nubia. Originally a Nubian deity.

Denwen - A serpent deity in the form of a dragon surrounded by flames. He held power over fire and was strong enough to destroy the gods. In the Pyramid Texts, he attempts to kill all the gods with his breath of fire but is overpowered by the spirit of the dead king who saves creation.

Duamutef - One of the Four Sons of Horus, a protector god of the canopic jar containing the stomach. He presided over the east, had the form of a jackal, and was watched over by the goddess Neith.

E

Ennead - The nine gods worshipped at Heliopolis who formed the tribunal in the Osiris Myth: Atum, Shu, Tefnut, Geb, Nut, Osiris, Isis, Nephthys, and Set. These nine gods decide whether Set or Horus should rule in the story The Contendings of Horus and Set. They were known as The Great Enne-ad. There was also a Little Ennead venerated at Heliopolis of minor deities.

F

Fetket - The butler of the sun god Ra who served him his drinks, patron god of bartenders.

Field of Offerings - A region of the afterlife devoted to Osiris, located to the west. In some inscriptions it is synonymous with the Field of Reeds.

Field of Reeds - The Egyptian paradise in the afterlife which the soul was admitted to after passing successfully through judgment and being justified by Osiris. It was a direct reflection of one's life on earth where one continued to enjoy everything as before but without sickness, disappointment, or the threat of death.

Forty-Two Judges - The Forty-two deities who presided with Osiris, Thoth, and Anubis over the judgment of the soul in the afterlife. Once the soul had made the Negative Confessions (Declaration of Innocence) the Forty-Two Judges advised Osiris on whether the confession should be accepted. They had names like Far-Strider, Fire-Embracer, Demolisher, Disturber, Owner of Faces, and Serpent Who Brings and Gives, among others.

Four Sons of Horus - Four deities, Duamutef, Hapy, Imset, and Qebehsenuef, who watched over the viscera of the dead in the four canopic jars placed in the tomb. Each had his own cardinal point to guard, his own internal organ to protect, and was watched over by a specific goddess.

G

Geb - God of the earth and growing things. Geb is the son of Shu and Tefnut, husband of Nut, the sky.

Gengen Wer - The celestial goose whose name means "Great Honker". He was present at the dawn of creation and guarded (or laid) the celestial egg containing the life force. He is a protector god who was worshipped very early in Egypt's history. Followers of Gengen Wer identified themselves with his protective attributes and wore talismans reminding them to re-spect life and honor the earth.

H

Ha - A protector god, Lord of the Western Deserts also known as Lord of the Libyans. He was god of the desert to the west of Egypt, son of the god Iaaw who was probably also a desert god. Ha provided protection from the Libyans and opened oases for travelers in the desert. Depicted as a strong young man with the sign of the desert over his head.

Hapi - A fertility god, god of the Nile silt and associated with the inundation which caused the river to overflow its banks and deposit the rich earth which the farmers relied on for their crops. Hapi was a very ancient god whose name may have originally been derived from the river and who was a personification of the river at flood. He is depicted as a man with large breasts and belly signifying fertility and success.

Hapy - Also known as Hapi, a protector god, one of the Four Sons of Horus who protected the canopic jar holding the lungs. He presided over the north, had the form of a baboon, and was watched over by Nephthys.

Hardedef - The son of King Khufu (also known as Cheops, 2589-2566 BCE) who wrote a book known as Instruction in Wisdom. The work was so brilliant it was considered the work of a god and he was deified after death.

Harueris - The Greek name for the sky aspect of Horus the Elder (also known as Horus the Great who appeared in the earthly realm as a falcon.

Harpocrates - The Greek and Roman name for Horus the Child, son of Osiris and Isis. Depicted as a young, winged boy with his finger to his lips. He was venerated in Greece as the god of secrets, silence, and confidentiality.

Hathor - One of the best known, most popular, and most important deities of ancient Egypt. She was the daughter of Ra and, in some stories, wife of Horus the Elder. A very ancient goddess, she was sent by Ra to destroy humanity for their sins. The other gods implored Ra to stop her destruction before no humans were left to benefit from the lesson. Ra then had a vat of beer dyed red, to resemble blood, and placed at Dendera which Hathor, in her blood lust, drank. She fell asleep and woke as the benevolent goddess who was a friend to all. She was the patron goddess of joy, inspiration, celebration, love, women, women's health, childbirth, and drunkenness. One of her names is "The Lady of Drunkenness". She was thought to live in sycamore trees and so was also known as "The Lady of the Sycamore." In the afterlife she helped guide the souls of the dead toward paradise and was one of the deities aboard the sun barge of Ra who defended it from Apep. She is further associated with gratitude and a thankful heart. The Greeks associated her with Aphrodite. She is depicted as a cow or a woman with a cow's head and evolved from the earlier god-dess Bat. Her characteristics were later largely absorbed by Isis.

Hathor-Nebet-Hetepet - A Mother Goddess aspect of Hathor worshipped at Heliopolis. She represented the hand, the active part, of the supreme god Atum (Ra).

Hatmehit (Hatmehyt) - She was a fish goddess worshipped in the Delta region of Mendes. Her name means "Foremost of the Fish". She arose from the totemic symbol of the nome (province) of the region around Mendes, which was a fish.

Haurun - A protector god associated with the Great Sphinx of Giza. He was originally a Canaanite god associated with destruction who planted a tree of death. When he was brought to Egypt by Canaanite and Syrian workers and merchants, he was transformed into a god of healing. His association with the Sphinx of Giza comes from these foreign workers who believed the Sphinx represented Haurun and built a shrine to their god in front of the statue. He is known as "The Victorious Herdsman" for a popular spell recited in his name for protection before going hunting.

Hedetet - Goddess of scorpions and protectress against their venom, an early version of Serket.

Heh and Hauhet - God and goddess of infinity and eternity. Heh was depicted as a frog and Hauhet as a serpent. Their names mean "endlessness" and they were among the original gods of the Ogdoad.

Heqet (Heket) - Goddess of fertility and childbirth, depicted as a frog or a woman with the head of a frog.

Heret-Kau - A protective goddess whose name means "She Who is Above the Spirits". She was worshipped during the period of the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE) as a life-giving spirit who also protected the souls of the dead in the afterlife. Her nurturing qualities were later absorbed by Isis.

Heka - One of the oldest and most important gods in ancient

Egypt. He was the patron god of magic and medicine but was also the primordial source of power in the universe. He existed before the gods and was pres-ent in the act of creation although, in later myths, he is seen as the son of Menhet and Khnum and part of the triad of Latopolis. He is depicted as a man carrying a staff and knife, and physicians were known as Priests of Heka. Magic was an integral part of medical practice in ancient Egypt, and so Heka became an important deity for doctors. He was said to have killed two serpents and entwined them on a staff as a symbol of his power; this image (borrowed from the Sumerians, actually) was passed on to the Greeks who associated it with their god Hermes and called it the caduceus. In the modern day, the caduceus is frequently confused with the Rod of Asclepius in iconography related to the medical profession.

Heryshaf - A fertility god depicted as a man with the head of a ram. He is an ancient god going back to the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE). He was later associated with Atum (Ra) and Osiris who absorbed his qualities.

Heset - Goddess of food and drink associated with beer and enjoyment. She was an early goddess of Egypt depicted as a cow with a tray of food on her horns and milk flowing freely from her udders. Beer was referred to as “the milk of Heset”. She was later absorbed into Hathor. She was part of the Triad of Heliopolis along with Mnevis and Anubis.

Hetepes-Sekhus - A personification of the Eye of Ra who appears as a cobra goddess in the afterlife and destroys the enemies of Osiris. She is depicted in the company of crocodiles.

Horus - An early avian god who became one of the most important deities in ancient Egypt. Associated with the sun, sky, and power, Horus became linked with the king of Egypt as early as the First Dynasty (c. 3150-2890)

BCE). Although the name 'Horus' might refer to a number of avian deities it principally designates two: Horus the Elder, one of the first five gods born at the beginning of creation, and Horus the Younger who was the son of Osiris and Isis. Following the rise in popularity of the Osiris Myth, Horus the Younger became one of the most important gods in Egypt. In the story, after Osiris is murdered by his brother Set, Horus is raised by his mother in the Delta swamps. When he comes of age he battles his uncle for the kingdom and wins, restoring order to the land. The kings of Egypt, with some exceptions, all linked themselves with Horus in life and with Osiris in death. The king was thought to be the living incarnation of Horus and, through him, the god gave all good things to his people. He is usually depicted as a man with the head of a hawk but is represented by many different images. His symbols are the Eye of Horus and the hawk.

Hu - God of the spoken word, personification of the first word spoken by Atum (Ra) at the dawn of creation which brought all into being. Linked with Sia and Heka. Sia represented the heart, Hu the tongue, and Heka their underlying force which gave them their power. Hu is often seen as a representation of the power of Heka or Atum and is depicted in funerary texts guiding the soul to the afterlife.

I

Iah (Yah) - A god of the moon who figures prominently in the Egyptian calendar. In the story of the creation of the world, Atum is angered by the intimate relationship between Geb (earth) and Nut (sky) and so separates them, declaring that Nut may not give birth to her children on any day of the year. The god Thoth appeared and gambled with Iah for five days worth of moonlight. He won and divided the moonlight hours into days which, because they were not part of the days of the year decreed by Atum, Nut could give birth in. She then gave birth to the first five gods: Osiris, Isis, Set, Nephthys, and Horus the Elder in July. The Egyptians regulated their calendar with these five magical days. Iah was eventually absorbed into the god Khonsu.

Iabet - Goddess of fertility and rebirth, known as “She of the East” and sometimes associated with Amenet (“She of the West”). Iabet presided over the eastern deserts and, in time, came to personify them. She was also known as “Cleanser of Ra” who bathed the sun before it appeared in the dawn sky and personified the freshness of the morning sun. She was eventually absorbed into Isis.

Ihy - God of music and joy, specifically the music of the sistrum. Son of Hathor and Horus the Elder. He was worshipped with Hathor at Dendera and invoked at festivals. His birth is honored in wall inscriptions at birth houses in Dendera in the belief that joy and music should welcome children to earth at their birth. Depicted as a child with a sistrum.

Imhotep - The vizier of king Djoser (c. 2670 BCE) who designed and built the Step Pyramid. He lived c. 2667-2600 BCE and was a polymath expert in many fields of study. His name means “He Who Comes in Peace” and, after his death, he was deified as a god of wisdom and medicine. He was identified by the Greeks with Aesculapius and was invoked in spells for healing. His medical treatises claimed, against conventional belief, that disease was natural in origin and not a punishment from the gods.

Imsety - A protector god, one of the Four Sons of Horus who protected the canopic jar holding the liver. He presided over the south, had the form of a human male, and was watched over by Isis.

Ipy - A Mother Goddess associated in some texts with the mother of Osiris, also known as Opet and “The Great Opet”. She is depicted as a hippopotamus or a combination of hippo, crocodile, human female, and lion, most often with a lion’s head, hippo’s body, human arms, lion feet. She was known as “Mistress of Magical Protection” and is first referenced in the Pyramid Texts as protecting and nourishing the king.

Ishtar - The Mesopotamian goddess of love, sexuality, and war. She was originally Inanna of the Sumerians and Akkadians, who became Ishtar to the Assyrians and influenced the development of other similar goddesses such as Aphrodite of the Greeks, Astarte of the Phoenicians, Hathor of the Egyptians, and Sauska of the Hittites, among others. She was probably first introduced to Egypt through trade in the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) but definitely gained prominent standing after the Assyrian conquest of Egypt by Ashurbanipal in 666 BCE.

Isis - The most powerful and popular goddess in Egyptian history. She was associated with virtually every aspect of human life and, in time, became elevated to the position of supreme deity, “Mother of the Gods”, who cared for her fellow deities as she did for human beings. She is the second-born of the First Five Gods (Osiris, Isis, Set, Nephthys, and Horus the Elder), sister-wife of Osiris, mother of Horus the Younger, and symbolically understood as the mother of every king. Her Egyptian name, Eset, means “Goddess of the Throne” because of her association with the monarch. She was also known as Weret-Kekau, “The Great Magic”, because of her incredible powers. She cared for people in life and appeared to them after death to help guide them safely to paradise. After the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great in 331 BCE, her worship traveled to Greece and then to Rome. During the time of the Roman Empire, she was worshipped in every corner of their realm from Britain through Eu-rope to Anatolia. The Cult of Isis was the strongest opponent of the new religion of Christianity between the 4th-6th centuries CE, and iconography, as well as tenets of belief, of the Isis cult were incorporated into the new faith. Imagery of the Virgin Mary holding her son Jesus comes directly from Isis cradling her son Horus and the Dying and Reviving God figure of Jesus himself is a version of Osiris.

thought to cause the inundation of the Nile River.

Isis-Eutheria - A later Greek version of Isis worshipped in Egypt whose tears, when she mourned for Osiris, were Iusaaset - A very early Mother Goddess referred to as “Grandmother of the Gods” and linked to Atum at the creation of the world. She is depicted in the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) as a woman with the uraeus and solar disc on her head holding a scepter and the ankh, symbol of life, and was associated with the acacia tree, the Tree of Life, considered the oldest tree in Egypt. She was known as “Lady of the Acacia”, an epithet later attributed to Hathor. She was known to the Greeks as Saosis.

Iw - A creation goddess worshipped at Heliopolis associated with Hathor and Atum, combining the qualities of Hathor, Nebet, and Hetepet.

J

Judgement Deities - See Forty-Two Judges

Jupiter-Amun - The Roman version of Zeus-Amun, king of the gods, worshipped at the Siwa Oasis in Egypt.

K

Kabechet (Kebhwet or Qebhet) - She was originally a celestial serpent deity who became known as the daughter of Anubis and a funerary deity. She provided pure, cool water to the souls of the deceased as they awaited judgment in the Hall of Truth. She was associated with Nephthys as a friend of the dead.

Kagemni - A vizier to the king Sneferu (c. 2613-2589 BCE) who wrote the wisdom text known as Instructions of Kagemni. The book was considered so important it was required instruction for children of the monarchy. He was deified after death and worshipped as a god of wisdom.

Kek and Kauket - Gods of obscurity and night, members of the original Ogdoad of Hermopolis. Kek and Kauket were the male/female aspects of darkness but not in any way associated with evil. Kek was the god of the hours before dawn and was known as “Bringer-in-of-the-Light” as he guided the sun barge of the god Ra toward the sky from the underworld. Kauket, his feminine balance, was depicted as a woman with the head of a serpent also called “Bringer-in-of-the-Darkness” who presided over the hours of twilight when the sun was setting and guided the sun barge into the underworld.

Khentekhtai (Khente-Khtai) - He was a crocodile god worshipped in the Fourth Dynasty (c. 2613-2498 BCE) at the city of Athribis. His name and protective qualities were later absorbed by Horus.

Khentiamenti (Khentiamentiu) - A fertility god of Abydos who became a funerary god. His name means “First of the Westerners” (also given as “Foremost of the Westerners”) in reference to his role as a god of the dead (associated with the west). His name and attributes were later absorbed by Osiris.

Khenmu (Khnum) - Also known as “The Great Potter”, Khenmu was an early god of Upper Egypt most probably from Nubia originally. In early myths, he was the god who fashioned human beings from the clay of the Nile River and then held them high so the light of Ra could shine upon them and give them life. Humans were then placed in a womb from which they were born on earth. Khenmu is depicted as a ram-headed god symbolizing virility and fertility. He formed a triad with the gods Anuket and Satis at Elephantine on the Egyptian border of Nubia. Linked to the god

Kherty, another ram-headed god, though a completely different entity. He is the patron god of potters and those who work in ceramics.

Khepri - An aspect of Ra the sun god in his morning form, represented by the scarab beetle.

Kherty (Cherti) - He was a ram-headed god of the underworld who ferried the dead on their last journey into the afterlife. In the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE) he was said to rule the afterlife with Osiris. Kherty reigned over the entrance and hallways leading to the Hall of Truth while Osiris had reign over the Hall and the Field of Reeds. The dead were greeted by other deities when they arrived in the afterlife and were then brought to the Hall of Truth for judgment by Kherty. In this role he was benevolent but some inscriptions suggest he was an enemy of order who threatened the deceased king on his entrance to the underworld. Conversely, he is also depicted as protecting the king.

Khonsu (Kons, Chonsu, Khensu, or Chons) - His name means "The Traveler" and he was god of the moon. He formed one of the most important and influential triads at Thebes along with his father Amun and mother Mut. He is depicted as a mummy holding the crook and flail with a uraeus and moon disc on his head. Khonsu replaced the earlier god Mon-tu as son of Mut and also took on his protective qualities. By the time of the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE) he was extremely popular and worshipped as the greatest among the gods after Amun. He was associated with healing and images of Khonsu were believed to have miraculous abilities to heal the sick instantly.

Lady of the Acacia - One of the names of the goddess Iusaaset, “Grand-mother of the Gods”, later given to Hathor.

Lady of the Sycamore - One of the names of Hathor who was believed to live in the sycamore tree which was sacred to her cult.

Lake of Flowers (Lily Lake) - The body of water in the afterlife which the souls of the justified dead crossed to reach paradise in the Field of Reeds. In the Book of the Dead, the justified souls are said to be able to swim and enjoy themselves by the shores of this lake.

Lates-Fish - The Nile perch sacred to the goddess Neith, worshipped as a divine entity as Esna.

M

Maahes (Mahe, Mihos, or Mysis) - He was a powerful solar god and protector of the innocent depicted as a lion-headed man carrying a long knife or a lion. His name is linked to the goddess of harmony and truth, Ma’at, and may mean “True Before Ma’at”. This interpretation is likely as his other names include “Lord of Slaughter” and “The Scarlet Lord” referring to his punishment of those who violated the sacred order life presided over by the goddess. He was commonly understood to be the son of Bastet but is also referred to as son of Sekhmet, only natural since both were associated with cats/lions. He possibly an aspect of the god Nefertum, also a son of Bastet, and formed a triad with Nefertum and Imhotep at Mem-phs. Linked by the Greeks with the Furies because of his vengeful nature.

Ma'at - Goddess of truth, justice, and harmony, one of the most important deities in the Egyptian pantheon. She set the stars in the sky and regulated the seasons. Ma'at embodied the principle of ma'at (harmony) which was central to the culture of ancient Egypt. Ma'at walked with one through life, was present in the form of the Feather of Truth at the soul's judgment after death, and continued as a presence in the paradise of the Field of Reeds. She is depicted as a woman wearing a crown with an ostrich feather. The word means "that which is straight" and the concept of harmony infused every aspect of an Egyptian's life. There is a time for every action and aspect of existence within ma'at but all must be recognized and acted upon at appropriate times.

Mafdet (Mefdet) - She was an early goddess of justice who pronounced judgment and meted out execution swiftly. Her name means "She Who Runs" for the speed with which she dispensed justice. She is the earliest feline deity in Egypt, pre-dating both Bastet and Sekhmet. She protected people from venomous bites, especially from scorpions, and predates Serket who later took on that role. All of Mafdet's qualities were later assumed by other female deities but Mafdet remained a popular goddess from the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) through the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE) when she appears as a judge in the afterlife. She is depicted as a woman with the head of a cat, cheetah, leopard, or lynx holding the rope and executioner's blade.

Mandulis (Marul or Merwel) - A Nubian solar deity worshipped by Egyptians at Philae and Kalabsha, both in far Upper Egypt near the Nubian border. The first temple to him was constructed at and Horus and is depicted as a falcon wearing a horned headdress (the hemhem crown) or a human wearing the same crown with serpents. In his association with Ra he appeared as a child, symbolizing the morning sun, and as an adult representing later day.

Mau - The divine cat who, in some stories, is present at the dawn of creation as an aspect of Ra. Mau protected the Tree of Life, which held the secrets of eternal life and divine knowledge, from the evil serpent Apep. The story of Mau and the tree is told in Spell 17 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead where it is clear the cat is Ra personified. Spell 17 also claims that this is the origin of cats on earth.

Mehen - The serpent god who wrapped himself around Ra in the sun barge to protect him from Apep's attacks. In early myths he is shown protecting Ra while Set fights off the serpent.

Mehet-Weret - An ancient sky goddess and one of the oldest deities of Egypt. She is the celestial cow goddess who rose from the primordial waters of chaos to give birth to the sun god Ra at the beginning of time. Her name means "Great Flood" and she is associated with fertility and abundance. After giving birth to the sun, she placed it between her horns and every morning lifted it into the sky. Her qualities were later absorbed by Hathor.

Mehit (Meyht) - She was a moon goddess from the Early Dynastic Period (c. 31250-2613 BCE) identified with the concept of the Distant Goddess who departs from Ra and returns to bring transformation. Usually depicted as a reclining lioness with three sticks protruding from behind her. Consort of Anhur.

Mekhit - Goddess of war, probably originally from Nubia, depicted as a roaring lioness and associated with the moon. She symbolized the vengeful aspect of the Eye of Ra. In one myth, the Eye of Ra departs for Nubia where it transforms itself into a lioness. The god Onuris hunts it down and returns it to Ra where it becomes (or gives birth to) Menhit who then becomes consort to Onuris. She was worshipped at Abydos in the cult center honoring her and Onuris. The story of Menhit, Onuris, and the Eye of Ra is an example of the Distant Goddess motif where the eye leaves Ra and returns or is returned, bringing transformation.

Menhit (Menhyt) - She was a solar deity who represented the brow of the sun god Ra, depicted as a reclining lioness. She was worshipped in the Delta region and associated with Neith and Wadjet as a protective goddess. Meretseger - A protector goddess in the form of a cobra venerated at Thebes. Specifically, she guarded the necropolis of the Valley of the Kings.

Merit - The goddess of music who helped to establish cosmic order through musical means. She was a minor goddess who was eventually totally eclipsed by Hathor in regard to music. Hathor became associated with the sistrum specifically and music generally but, earlier, Merit was the goddess who "conducted" the symphony of order which accompanied creation.

Meskenet - Goddess of childbirth and one of the oldest deities of Egypt. Meskenet was present at one's birth, created one's ka (aspect of the soul) and breathed it into one's body. In doing so, she provided the person's destiny.

through their character. She was also present at the judgment of the soul in the afterlife as a comforter and so was with an individual at birth, through life, and after death. She is depicted as a birthing brick (the stone women would squat on to give birth) with the head of a woman or a seated woman with a birthing brick on her head. Her role of providing one's destiny was eventually taken over by the Seven Hathors but she continued to be venerated in homes throughout Egypt's history.

Mestjet - A lion-headed goddess worshipped at Abydos as one of the many aspects of the Eye of Ra. She undoubtedly was featured in stories of the Distant Goddess, as deities associated with the Eye of Ra usually are, but no stories have been found thus far. She is only known from a single stela at Abydos which shows her standing with the ankh in one hand and a staff in the other as a woman and her daughter approach to pay her homage.

Min - An ancient fertility god from the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE). Min was god of the eastern deserts who watched over travelers but was also associated with the black fertile mud of the Egyptian Delta. He is shown as the husband of Isis and father of Horus in early inscriptions and so is associated with Osiris. Min is depicted as a man holding his erect penis in one hand with the flail of authority in the other.

Mnevis (Mer-Wer or Nem-Wer) – Mnevis was the sacred bull of Heliopo-lis considered an aspect of the sun god Ra. He was a live bull selected from a herd for his completely black coat. Only one Mnevis bull could exist at any one time and another was chosen only after the first died. He was eventually absorbed into Apis.

Montu - A falcon god who rose to prominence in the 11th

Dynasty at Thebes (c. 2060-1991 BCE). His name was taken by all three rulers of the dynasty in the form of Mentuhotep (Montuhotep) meaning "Montu is Pleased". He eventually became associated with Ra as the composite sun god Mont-Ra and was associated with Horus as a war god. The Greeks equated him with Apollo Mut - An early mother goddess who most likely had a minor role during the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) but who later became prominent as the wife of Amun and mother of Khonsu, part of the Theban Triad. Mut was a protector deity associated with Bastet and Sekhmet. She guarded over people in life and, in Spell 164 of the Book of the Dead, is depicted as a savior of souls trapped by demons in the afterlife. She was also the divine protector of the king and state who roasted conspirators and traitors in her flaming brazier.

N

Nebethetpet - A goddess worshipped at Heliopolis as the personification of the hand of Atum, the active, feminine principle of the god.

Nefertum (Nefertem) - God of perfume and sweet aromas. Nefertum was born from the bud of the blue lotus flower at the dawn of creation and was originally an aspect of Atum. His name means "Beautiful Atum". He was later considered his own deity and became associated with sweet-smelling flowers. He is associated with rebirth and transformation through his link to the sun god and flowers. In Egyptian medicine he was called upon for healing aromas to cure disease and associated with incense.

Nehebkau (Nehebu-Kau) - "He Who Unites the Ka", was a protector god who joined the ka (aspect of the soul) to the body at birth and united the ka with the ba (winged aspect of the soul) after death. He is depicted as a serpent and, like Heka, has always existed. Nehebkau swam in the primordial waters at the dawn of creation before Atum rose from the chaos to impose order.

a just judge of the dead in the Hall of Truth.

Nehmetawy - A protector goddess whose name means “She Who Em-braces Those in Need”. She was worshipped at Hermopolis where she was considered the wife of Nehebkau. In other regions, she was the consort of the god of wisdom and writing, Thoth.

Neith - One of the oldest and most enduring deities of ancient Egypt, worshipped from the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) through the Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 BCE), the last to rule Egypt before it was taken by Rome. Neith was a war goddess, creator goddess, mother goddess, and funerary goddess in her time and patron of the city of Sais in the Nile Delta. She was the most important goddess of Lower Egypt in early history and continued to hold a prominent position in worship for millennia. In early depictions she is seen with a bow and arrows and one of her epithets was “Mistress of the Bow”. As a creator goddess she was identified with the waters of chaos (Nun) prior to creation and, in this role, she is called “Grandmother of the Gods” or “Mother of the Gods”. She was thought to have invented birth and was closely associated with living and growing things. As a mother goddess, she is the mediator of the gods’ disputes, most famously as the goddess who settles the question of whether Horus or Set should rule Egypt when the tribunal of the gods can-not decide. She also became prominent as a funerary goddess who watched over the dead. Her statue appears with those of Isis, Nephthys, and Serket in Tutankhamun’s tomb. She is the guardian goddess over Duamutef, one of the Four Sons of Horus who watch over the canopic jars in the tombs and is also depicted as Nekhbet - A protector goddess in the form of a vulture who guarded Upper Egypt. She was associated with Wadjet, protector of Lower Egypt. The two are referred to as "The Two Ladies".

Nekheny - A protector god in the form of a falcon who was patron of the town of Nekhen in the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE). His attributes were eventually absorbed by Horus.

Neper - God of the grains, son of the harvest goddess Renenutet. He was a personification of corn and associated with Osiris as a fertility god. Neper predates Osiris and may have been one of the earlier gods who prefigure the Osiris Myth. Coffin Text II.95 refers to him as the god "living after he has died" and inscriptions relate him with the Dying and Reviving God figure prior to Osiris' popularity.

Nephthys - A funerary goddess, one of the first five gods born of Geb and Nut after the creation of the world, wife of Set, twin sister of Isis, and mother of Anubis. Her name means "Mistress of the Temple Enclosure" or "Mistress of the House" referring to a heavenly house or temple. She is depicted as a woman with a house on her head. Nephthys is widely, and incorrectly, regarded as a minor deity when actually she was worshipped throughout Egypt from the earliest periods to the last dynasty to rule Egypt. She was considered the dark goddess to the light of Isis but this carried no negative connotation, only balance. Nephthys features prominently in the Osiris myth when she transforms herself into the form of Isis to seduce Osiris, when she betrays the location of Osiris' body to Set, and when she helps her sister revive the dead king. She was known as "Friend of the Dead" for her care of the souls in the afterlife and professional mourners at funerals, who encouraged the open expression of grief, were known as the “Kites of Nephthys”. In the text The Lamentations of Isis and Nephthys she calls the soul of Osiris back from the dead. This text was recited regularly at festivals, services, and funerals throughout Egypt.

Nu (Nun) and Naunet - Nu was the personification of the primordial chaos from which the world arose. Naunet is his female aspect and consort. Nu is commonly regarded as “Father of the Gods” while Naunet is only referenced regarding the Ogdoad, the grouping of eight primordial gods, four males matching four females, who represent the original elements of creation. In some later myths, the goddess Neith is associated with Nu.

Nut - The primordial sky goddess who personified the canopy of the heavens, wife of Geb (earth), mother of Osiris, Isis, Set, Nephthys, and Horus the Elder. After the primordial mound rose from the waters of chaos at creation, Atum (Ra) sent his children Shu and Tefnut out to create the world. When they returned, he was so happy he shed tears of joy which became human beings. These creatures had nowhere to live and so Shu and Tefnut mated to give birth to Geb (earth) and Nut (sky). Their relationship was so intimate that it disturbed Atum who pushed Nut high above Geb and fixed her there. He also decreed that she could not give birth on any day of the year. Thoth, the god of wisdom, gambled with Iah, god of the moon, and won five days worth of moonlight which he transformed into days. Nut was able to then give birth to her five children on five consecutive days in July which were not part of Atum's original. In some versions of the story it is Khonsu who loses the gamble with Thoth.

O

Ogdoad - The eight gods representing primordial elements of creation: Nu and Naunet (water); Heh and Hauhet (infinity); Kek and Kauket (darkness); Amun and Amaunet (hiddenness, obscurity). The concept of balance, so important to Egyptian culture, was epitomized in the various ogdoads of Egyptian gods/sprits of place.

Onuris (Anhur) - He was a god of war and hunting. His name means "He Who Brings Back The Distant One" which is a reference to the story about his retrieval of the Eye of Ra from Nubia. In this tale, the Eye of Ra goes forth from Egypt and transforms itself into a lion. Onuris hunts the lion, captures it, and returns it to Ra where it transforms into the goddess Mekhit who then becomes his consort. This story is an example of the Distant Goddess motif in which the Eye of Ra departs from the sun god and then is returned (or returns itself) bringing transformation. Onuris was considered a son of Ra and associated with the god Shu. His image (as Anhur) appeared on the banners of the Egyptian army as he led them to war, protected them in battle, and brought them safely home. He was the patron god of the Egyptian army and of hunters.

Osiris - Lord and judge of the dead, one of the First Five gods born of Nut at the dawn of creation, and one of the most popular and enduring gods of Egypt. His name means “Powerful” or “Mighty”. Osiris was originally a fertility god who grew in popularity and influence through the Osiris Myth in which he is killed by his brother, Set, brought back to life by his wife Isis, fathers sky god Horus, and descends to the underworld as Judge of the Dead. In the Egyptian Book of the Dead he is mentioned frequently as the just judge in the Hall of Truth who weighs the hearts of the souls of the dead against the white feather of ma’at. He is an early example of the Dying and Reviving God figure in mythology who leant himself to the later version of this figure, Jesus Christ. Egyptian kings identified themselves with Osiris in death and he is usually depicted as a mummy (symbolizing death) and with green or black skin (symbolizing the fertility of the Nile region and life). He was so popular that people in ancient Egypt paid to have their bodies buried at Abydos near his cult center and those who could not afford that would pay for memorials to be erected to them or their loved ones at Abydos believing that proximity to Osiris on earth guaranteed easier access to paradise after death. His cult naturally merged with that of his wife and the Cult of Isis, with its symbolism of salvation, eternal life, the dying and reviving god, and the divine son born of a virgin mother, would later influence the development of early Christianity.

Osiris-Apis - The Apis bull, traditionally associated with the god Ptah, became linked to Osiris as the latter god grew more popular. At Saqqara, the priests began to worship a hybrid god they called Osiris-Apis who was the god in bull form. As with the traditional Apis bull, a live bull was considered an incarnation of the god. When the sacred bull died it was mummified with the same care given a king.

P

Pakhet - A hunting goddess in lioness form, her name means “She Who Scratches” or “Tearer”. She was a consort of Horus and associated with the vengeful aspects of Sekhmet and the justice of Isis. She was thought to hunt at night and terrify her enemies.

Panebtawy - The child god, personification of the king as divine son of Horus and also of Horus as a child. He was depicted as a young boy with his finger to his lips, prefiguring the later image of Harpocrates, the Greek version of the child Horus. His name means “Lord of the Two Lands”. He was the son of Tasetnofret, a local goddess of Kom Ombo who was a manifestation of Hathor.

Pataikos - Minor amuletic deities who represented the power of the god Ptah. They were depicted as dwarf-gods and worn for protection.

Peak - Known as “Peak of the West”, the personification of the highest peak of the cliffs which overshadowed the Valley of the Kings and worshipped by the workers at Deir el-Medina as a protective power.

Petese and Pihor - Two human brothers known as “the sons of Kuper” who drowned in the Nile River near Dendur. They were deified for their association with Osiris, stemming from their death in the river, and served as local deities of protection. Augustus Caesar built a temple in their honor at Dendur which is now on display at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. The temple’s reliefs show the god-brothers offering gifts to Isis.

Ptah - One of the oldest Egyptian gods who appears in the First Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) but most likely dates from the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE). Ptah was the great god of Memphis, creator of the world, lord of truth, and chief god of the city of Memphis and its surrounding area c. 3000 BCE. Ptah was originally the figure who stood on the primordial mound of the ben-ben at the creation of the world.

He was probably an early fertility god and is associated with the moringa tree which, in an early myth, he liked to rest beneath. He was the patron god of sculptors and craftsmen as well as builders of monuments as he was thought to have sculpted the earth. He was sometimes known as Ptah-Nun or Ptah-Naunet in his creative aspect, linking him with the primordial substances of the Og-doad. He is depicted as a mummified man wearing a skull cap holding the Was scepter of authority with the ankh and djed symbols at the top.

Ptah-hotep - Author of one the more famous Wisdom Texts, who was deified after his death and honored with his own cult.

Ptah-Sokar-Osiris - A hybrid god of these three associated with creation, death, and rebirth. Worshipped in the period of the Middle Kingdom (2040-1782 BCE).

Qebhet - See Kabechet

Qebehsenuef - A protector god, one of the Four Sons of Horus who protected the canopic jar of the intestines. He presided over the west, had the form of a hawk, and was watched over by Serket.

Qudshu (Qadesh) - Syrian goddess of love, consort of the war god Reshep, assimilated into Egyptian worship during the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE). She was the goddess of sexual pleasure and sacred ecstasy who was associated with Hathor, Anat, and Astarte. Her name means “Holy” and she is always depicted as a slim naked woman holding the symbols of eroticism and fertility, lotus blossoms in her right hand and snakes or papyrus stems in her left. She was widely venerated throughout Egypt. Her cult reenacted the sacred marriage between Qud-shu and Reshep, a ritual long associated with the Cult of Ishtar/Inanna in Mesopotamia and Astarte in Phoenicia.

R

Ra (Atum or Re) - The great sun god of Heliopolis whose cult spread across Egypt to become the most popular by the Fifth Dynasty (2498-2345 BCE). The pyramids of Giza are associated with Ra as the supreme lord and cre-ator god who ruled over the land of the living and the dead. He drives his sun barge across the heavens by day, showing another aspect of himself with each advance of the sun across the sky, and then dives into the underworld at evening where the barge is threatened by the primordial serpent Apep (Apophis) and must be defended by the other gods and souls of the justified dead. Ra was among the most important and popular gods of Egypt. Even when the god Amun rose in prominence, Ra's position was undiminished and he merged with Amun to become Amun-Ra, the supreme god.

Raettawy (Raet or Raet-Tawy) - She was the female aspect of Ra. She is associated with Hathor and is depicted as closely resembling Hathor with the uraeus on her head holding the solar disk, sometimes with two feathers over the disk.

Ra-Harakhte (Raharakty or Ra-Harakhty) - A falcon god amalgam of Ra and Horus who personified the sun at the two horizons, sunrise and sunset. 'Harakhte' means "Horus of the Horizon". He is depicted as a man with a hawk's head wearing the solar disk as a crown.

Renpet - A goddess who personified the year. She is represented in in-scriptions by a notched palm branch signifying the passing of time, the hieroglyphic image for 'year'. She had no formal cult or temple but was an integral part of the Egyptian's understanding of time: that it was imbued, like everything else, with personality and vitality.

Renenutet (Renenet or Ernutet) - A very important goddess depicted as a cobra or a rearing cobra with the head of a woman. Her name means "Snake Who Nourishes" and she was goddess of nursing and rearing children. In time, she became closely associated with Meskhenet, goddess of childbirth and destiny, and even superseded her to determine the length of a person's life and significant events which would befall them. Along with Meskhenet, she was also associated with Neith and sometimes portrayed as the mother of Osiris, with Isis as the wife of Osiris and mother of Horus, as Atum's wife or consort. In the afterlife she appeared as the "Lady of Justification" linking her with the goddess Ma'at. She was thought to protect the clothing worn by the king in the afterlife and so was also known as "Lady of the Robes". In this capacity, she appeared as a fire-breathing cobra who drove away the enemies of the king. She was also a grain goddess known as "Lady of the Fertile Fields" and "Lady of the Granaries" who protected the harvest and was the mother of Nepri, god of grain. As a fertility goddess, she was further linked to the Nile River and the inundation and so with Hapi, the god of the fertile mud of the Nile.

Reret - A protector deity in the form of a hippopotamus whose name means "Sow". She represented the constellation Draco and was a protectress of the sun barge as it made its way through the underworld. As the constellation, she is sometimes known as Reret-weret ("The Great Sow") and was referred to as Mistress of the Horizon. She is associated with the better-known Hippopotamus goddess Taweret and, as a sky goddess and protective force, with Hathor and Nut.

Reshep - A Syrian war god assimilated into Egyptian worship during the period of the New Kingdom (1570-1069 BCE). He was the consort of the goddess of sexual pleasure and sacred ecstasy Qudshu (Qadesh) and was worshipped with her in a triad which included the fertility god Min. The sacred marriage of Qudshu and Reshep was reenacted by their followers linking the cult to that of Inanna/Ishtar of Mesopotamia which had long practiced the same ritual. Reshep is further linked to Mesopotamia through his identification in iconography with the Mesopotamian war god Nergal. As a god of pestilence, he is also linked to Set, god of chaos and the arid wastes. Reshep is uniformly depicted as a strong warrior holding a raised war club and wearing a skirt and long Mesopotamian-styled beard.

Ruty - The twin lion gods who represented the eastern and western horizons. The name means "Pair of Lions". They were originally associated with Shu and Tefnut as sky deities and eventually became linked with Ra and the solar barge.

S

Sah - An astral god, personification of the constellation Orion, usually paired with Sothis (Sopdet) as representations of the astral forms of Osiris and Isis. He is referred to as "Father of the gods" in the Pyramid Texts and was an important aspect of funerary rites where he welcomed the king to the afterlife. Known also as the "Dweller in Orion", Pyramid Text chapter 186 welcomes the soul, "In the name of the Dweller in Orion, with a season in the sky and a season on earth" which can be understood as, "with a season in the sky after a season on earth". He is depicted as a man holding the ankh and was sceptre standing in a boat surrounded by stars in a night sky.

Satis (Satet or Satit) - Goddess of the southern border of Egypt with Nubia and associated with Elephantine in the region of Aswan. Her name first appears on stone jars at Saqqara which were placed inside the lower chambers of Djoser's Step Pyramid (c. 2670 BCE) and she is thought to be an older goddess from the Predynastic Period of Egypt (c. 6000-3150 BCE). She is sometimes seen as the consort of Khnum, god of the Nile at Elephantine where the Egyptians believed the river originated and is associated with the Eye of Ra and Distant Goddess motif in some tales where she returns from a great distance to bring transformation. In this capacity, she is linked to the inundation of the Nile. She is also linked to Sothis (Sopdet), the personification of the star Sirius whose appearance in the night sky heralded the inundation. She is depicted as a woman wearing the White Crown of Upper Egypt with antelope horns.

Sebiumeker - A guardian god who was a major deity in Meroe, Kush as god of procreation and fertility. Sebiumeker is associated with Atum as a creator god and may have been the supreme god of the pantheon in the region which is modern-day Sudan. His statuary, along with another god named Tabo, has often been found near doorways giving rise to the interpretation that he was a guardian god. He may not have been, however; his placement at doorways could have had some meaning touching on transformation, especially when placed at the doorways of temples.

Sed - An ancient jackal deity whose name first appears on the Palermo Stone from the Fifth Dynasty (2498-2345 BCE) but who was most likely much older. He was the protector of kingship and the individual king. He presided over the Sed Festival (also known as the Heb-Sed Festival) which was held every thirty years of a king's rule to rejuvenate him. He was eventually absorbed by Wepwawet or it could be that Wepwawet (whose name means "Opener of the Ways") was simply one of Sed's epithets which became more popular. As protector of the divine king, Sed was associated with justice and so linked to the goddess Ma'at.

Sefkhet-Abwy (Safekh-Aubi) - See Seshat.

worshipped as the deity who protected one from snake bites and some form of Sepa was Sekhmet - One of the most significant goddesses of ancient Egypt. Sekhmet was a leonine deity usually depicted as a woman with the head of a lion. Her name means "Powerful" and is usually interpreted as "The Female Powerful One". She was a goddess of destruction and healing, of desert winds and cool breezes. She was the daughter of Ra who appears in one of the most important stories concerning the Eye of Ra/Distant Goddess motif. When Ra became tired of the sins of humanity, he sent Sekhmet to destroy them. She ravaged the land until the other gods implored Ra to stop her before humans were destroyed completely. Ra had a vat of beer dyed red to attract Sekhmet's blood lust and left it at Dendera where she drank it and fell into a deep sleep; when she woke she was the benevolent Hathor. Sekhmet continued to exist in her leonine form, however, and was the patron deity of the military for her powers of destruction and vengeance. She was known as "Smiter of the Nubians" in this regard but she also brought natural disaster. Plagues were known as "Messengers of Sekhmet" or "Slaughterers of Sekhmet". In the same way that she could bring the desert winds, she could deflect them, and the same with pestilence; just as she had brought the plague, she could cure it and was known as "Mistress of Life" in this capacity (and so was frequently invoked in healing spells and incantations by ancient doctors). She was closely associated with other leonine deities such as Bastet and Pakhet and was thought to be the aggressive, violent aspect of the goddess Mut.

Sepa - A protector god in the form of a centipede with the head of a don-key or horns, known as "The Centipede of Horus". He was venerated in the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE). He had his own temple at Heliopolis where he was associated with Osiris in a mummified form symbolizing his protective powers in the afterlife.

Serapis - The hybrid god created by Ptolemy I Soter of Egypt (r. 323-283 BCE), first ruler of the Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 BCE), the last dynasty to rule Egypt before it was taken under Roman governance. Serapis was a blend of Osiris and Apis but his character and attributes were a blending of these two Egyptian deities with the Greek gods Zeus, Helios, Dionysus, Hades, and Asclepius. He was the supreme deity worshipped at the famous Serapeum nearby the Library of Alexandria. Ptolemy I wanted to create the kind of multi-cultural society his late commander and role model Alexander the Great had attempted and Serapis was an important component in this. Serapis was a complete blend of Egyptian and Greek ideals who suited the kind of society Ptolemy I encouraged.

Seret - A leonine protective goddess probably from Libya. She is only mentioned in a Fifth Dynasty (2498-2345 BCE) inscription as a goddess of a region of Egypt inhabited mainly by Libyans – the 3rd Lower Egypt Nome (province). Like the other leonine deities, she is a fierce protector of her followers and avenges wrongs done to them.

Serket (Selket, Serqet or Serkis) - She was a protective and also an important funerary goddess probably originating in the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) and first mentioned during the First Dynasty of Egypt (c. 3150-2890 BCE). She is best known from her golden statue found in the tomb of Tutankhamun. Serket was a scorpion goddess depicted as a woman with a scorpion on her head and arms outstretched in a protective pose. She may have been an early Mother Goddess who evolved into a deity who protected people (especially children) from scorpion ven-om and then to one who protected from all venom. A story known as Isis and the Seven Scorpions tells of how Isis was insulted by a rich woman once and Serket, who had sent her seven scorpions along as Isis' body-guards, instructed one of them to sting the woman's son. The boy was going to die from the venom but Isis saved him and forgave the wom-an. Afterwards, Serket followed Isis' example of forgiveness and protected other children from scorpions. Her priests were largely physicians who invoked her name in healing. In the afterlife she helped guide the souls of the dead to paradise and protected a certain dangerous section of travel. Along with Isis, Neith, and Nephthys, she watches over the Four Sons of Horus as they guard the viscera of the dead in tombs.

Seshat (Sefkhet-Abwy or Safekh-Aubi) — She was the goddess of writ-ing, books, notations, and measurements. Her name means "The Female Scribe" and she was the consort of Thoth, god of wisdom and writing (though sometimes she is depicted as his daughter). She is the patron-ess of libraries, both public and private, and was known as "She Who is Foremost in the House of Books". She was also the patron goddess of scribes. As goddess of measurements she ensured the king measured correctly in commissioning the building of temples and monuments and assisted him in measurements for rituals. She is first mentioned in the Second Dynasty (c. 2890-2670 BCE) as helping king Khasekemwy in this regard. Her association with measurements eventually made her the patroness of builders, architects, and those who dealt in accounting for cattle, other animals, and captives seized in war. Although she never had a temple of her own, as R.H. Wilkinson observes, "by virtue of her role in the foundation ceremony she was a part of every temple building” (167). She is depicted as a woman wearing a leopard skin over a robe with a headband holding a stick with a star on top. She holds a writing implement in her right hand and the notched palm stalk representing the years’ passage in her left. Horus declared rightful king and Set banished to the desert lands.

Set (Seth) - God of war, chaos, storms, and pestilence. His name is trans-lated as “Instigator of Confusion” and “Destroyer”. He is depicted as a red beast with cloven hooves and a forked tale and is the prototype for the later iconography of the Christian Devil. Set was originally a hero-god who drove away the serpent Apep (Apophis) from the barge of the sun god and killed it nightly. He was a desert god who brought the evil winds of the dry lands to the lush Nile Valley and was associated with foreign lands and people. His consorts were Anat and Astarte, both goddesses associated with war and both from foreign countries, as well as Taweret, the benign protective goddess of childbirth and fertility. Set is often characterized as “evil”, and did manifest many evil qualities, but was not regarded by the ancient Egyptians as an embodiment of evil or darkness. He was rather seen as a necessary balance to gods like Osiris and Horus who represent-ed all things noble and good, fertility, vitality, and eternity. Set is best known as the world’s first murderer in the Myth of Osiris where he kills his brother to usurp the throne. Isis returns Osiris to life but, because he is incomplete, descends to the underworld as Lord of the Dead. Isis gives birth to Osiris’ son, Horus, who grows up to challenge set for the throne. Their battles, which lasted for eighty years, are described in the text The Contendings of Horus and Set and were resolved in one version by Isis while, in another, by Neith with Shay (Shai) - The personification of fate. Shay presided over one's personal destiny and so was associated with goddesses like Meskhenet and Renenu-tet. Similar to The Fates of the ancient Greeks, no one could resist or alter Shay's decisions. The scholar Wilkinson cites a text known as Instructions of Amenemopet which states, "None can ignore Shay" (128). This statement epitomizes Shay's chief characteristic: inevitability. He is depicted as being present at the weighing of the heart of the soul in the afterlife or as a man standing in a posture of patience. During the Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 BCE), when Egyptian gods were Hellenized, he was known as Agathodaemon, the serpent deity who could tell one's future.

Shed - A protective god who guarded against personal harm from wild animals or mortal enemies. He was invoked by hunters and soldiers and known as "He Who Rescues" and "The Enchanter". He was lord of the wild animals and weapons and so could control both to protect a person who invoked his name. He was also sought in protection against magic spells cast by one's enemies and possibly against demons or ghosts. He is depicted as a young man with shaved head except for the sidelock denoting youth and carries a quiver of arrows. He often grasps serpents in his hands as though crushing them. Eventually his attributes were absorbed by Horus although he was still venerated by people in their homes and through amulets.

Shentayet - An obscure protective goddess whose name means "Widow" and who was associated with that aspect of Isis who lost her husband and then brought him back to life. This aspect was referred to as Isis-Shentayet. Quite likely invoked as a protectress of widows but references to her are rare and Isis fulfilled that role as she did so many others.

Shepet - A protective goddess who was an aspect of the hippopotamine deities Reret or Taweret worshipped at Dendera. In iconography she appears like either of these two but with a crocodile head.

Shesmetet - A protective leonine goddess known as “Lady of Punt” and most likely an important goddess brought to Egypt through trade with Punt. She is generally regarded as an aspect of Bastet or Sekhmet but quite possibly she was a much older deity whose attributes were absorbed by later leonine goddesses. Her name is mentioned as early as the First Dynasty (c. 3150-2890 BCE) and lent itself to the Shesmetet girdle, a belt of beads, worn by the kings of that time. She is depicted as a woman with the head of a lion.

Shezmu - God of wine and, later, of perfume and plenty who personified the positive and negative aspects of drunkenness. Shezmu is depicted in the Pyramid Text 403 killing and cooking the gods for the king's pleasure and, by the Middle Kingdom (2040-1782 BCE) was seen tormenting the souls of the dead as he “lassoes the damned and corrals them for slaughter, squeezing their heads like grapes in a bloody image of destruction” (Wilkinson, 129). His image was softened by others showing his benign and peaceful side as lord of the wine press and this was softened further as he became associated with oils and perfumes.

Shu - The primordial god of the air whose name means “Emptiness”. He was born at the beginning of creation of Atum (Ra) and sent to create the world with his sister Tefnut (goddess of moisture). The two were gone so long that Atum came to miss them and sent his eye (the Eye of Ra) in search of them. When the eye returned with them, Atum was so happy he cried and his tears created human beings. She and Tefnut then mated and gave birth to Geb (earth) and Nut (sky) who Atum pushed high apart from each other, providing a place for humans to live. Mist was attributed to him as “Lakes of Shu” and the clouds as “Bones of Shu” and he was also associated with light and brightness. In this regard he came to be linked to Thoth and Khonsu, both associated with the moon, because of moonlight.

Sia - The personification of perception and thoughtfulness who represent-ed the heart (seat of emotion, thought, and character). Sia formed a dyad with Hu (representing the tongue), personification of the authority of the spoken word, and a triad with Hu and Heka, god of magic and medi-cine but also the primordial force in the universe which empowered life and sustained ma’at. Sia represented the intellect while Hu symbolized the word of Ptah (or Atum) which brought thought into reality and Heka was the underlying force which gave them power. Sia is depicted as a man standing at the right side of Ptah (later, Atum/Ra) and held his papyrus scroll. In the Valley of the Kings he is seen in paintings as a member of the crew aboard Ra’s sun barge.

Sky Bull - The deity who presided over the heavens and the afterlife as a protector, also known as “Bull of the West” for his association with the af-terlife. Commonly understood to be the husband of the seven cows which are seen with him.

Sobek - An important protective deity in the form of a crocodile or a man with a crocodile’s head, Sobek was a god of water but also associated with medicine and particularly surgery. His name means “Crocodile” and he was lord of marshes and wetlands and any other wet areas of Egypt. In the Pyramid Texts he is claimed to be the son of Neith and was worshipped widely from the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE) onwards. As god of wetlands he was associated with fertility and procreation but, as the croc-odile god, also with unexpected death. He was said to separate wives from their husbands at a whim. Sobek lived on a mythical mountain at the horizon which he ruled from and so was linked to the authority of the king as he, himself, was lord of a domain. This link with the horizon associated him with Ra and led to the form of Ra known as Sobek-Ra. Sobek is one of the best-known gods of ancient Egypt and was extremely popular in his time. His priests kept live crocodiles in the temples who were fed lavishly on the best cuts of meat and treated better than many human beings of the time. When these crocodiles died they were mummified and buried with all the care given to a person. He was also associated with the Nile which was said to issue forth as the sweat of Sobek.

Sokar (Seker) - A protective falcon god of Memphis who was originally an agricultural deity and one of the oldest in Egypt. His festival was one of the earliest observed and, merged with the Khoiak Festival of Osiris, continued to be celebrated throughout Egypt's history. He evolved from a god of agriculture and growth to the god of craftsmen and guardian of the Memphis necropolis after Osiris became more popular. Sokar is often depicted as a funerary mound surrounded by falcon heads, as a falcon, or as a falcon-headed man. He is associated with the afterlife as guardian of the entrance to the underworld and the god who carries the deceased king's soul in his barge to paradise. In time, he became associated with Ptah and then Osiris to eventually combine by the

Sons of Horus - See Four Sons of Horus.

Sopdu (Soped or Sopedu) - A protective god of the eastern border of Egypt who guarded over the outposts and soldiers on the frontier. He is depicted as a falcon with a flail over the right wing or as a bearded man with a crown featuring two feathers. Sopdu was associated with Horus and the deified king in his astral form. Wilkinson writes, "The deceased king, in his role as Osiris-Orion, is said to impregnate Isis as the star Sothis and to produce Horus-Sopdu" (211). In the earthly realm, he ensured the proper resources reached the eastern border garrisons and helped the king control native populations in those regions.

Sothis - The personification of the star Sirius (the "dog star") whose appearance heralded the annual inundation of the Nile. She was worshipped as a cow-goddess in the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) associated with Sirius. She was the consort of Sah, who personified the constellation Orion, and the two were associated with Osiris and Isis. In this role, she was the mother of Sopdu and so appealed to as a protective influence. She was also associated with Satis who was linked to the inundation of the Nile as consort of Khnum. Early depictions of Sothis represent her as a cow with a plant between her horns while later images show her as a woman wearing the White Crown of Upper Egypt with horns on her head or feathers with a five-pointed star above her. She became increasingly identified with Isis and was eventually absorbed into that goddess completely. Isis refers to herself as Sothis in a copy of the text of The Lamentations of Isis and Nephthys from the Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 BCE) showing how the assimilation was almost complete by that Souls of Nekhen and Pe - Protective spirits who were considered the ancestral souls of the city of Nekhen in Upper Egypt (also known as Hierakonpolis) and the city of Pe in Lower Egypt (also known as Buto). These spirits symbolically united Upper and Lower Egypt and served the king in life and through death. While the king lived he was identified with Horus, who the souls encouraged, and when the king died he became associated with Osiris, whom the souls mourned and honored. The souls of Pe are depicted as men with falcon heads and those of Nekhen as jackal headed. Both are seen in tomb inscriptions of the kings kneeling to honor the deceased king's arrival in the afterlife.

Star Deities - Gods and goddesses identified with the night sky. By the time of the Middle Kingdom (2040-1782 BCE) the Egyptians had identified five of the planets which they referred to as "Stars That Know No Rest" and associated with gods: the called Mercury 'Sebegu' (a form of the god Set); Venus ("The One Who Crosses" and "God of the Morning"); Mars ("Horus of the Horizon" and "Horus the Red"); Jupiter ("Horus Who Limits the Two Lands"); Saturn ("Horus Bull of the Heavens"). Further, the star Sirius was associated with Sothis and then Isis while Orion represented the god Sah, "Father of the Gods". The appearance of Sirius heralded the inundation of the Nile, the promise of fertility, and represented the cyclical nature of existence and so came to be linked to Osiris, the dying and reviving god, and Isis, the one who revived him. The stars then were called "Followers of Osiris" who sailed across the night sky in accordance with divine pattern. Sah and Sothis in the heavens reflected the divine couple Osiris and Isis and the god Sopdu, (son of Sothis), the astral form of Horus. Thus the night sky told the stories of the most meaningful stories of the Egyptian culture and

Sutekh - The Semitic name for the god Set (Seth) which the people known as the Hyksos introduced during the Second Intermediate Period (c. 1782-1570 BCE). The Hyksos identified Set with the warlike aspect of their god Baal. Set was referred to as Sutekh through the reign of Ramess-es II (1279-1213 BCE) and invoked as a vanguard in war.

T

Ta-Bitjet - A protective goddess specifically against poisonous bites and stings. She is frequently invoked in healing spells and associated with the goddess Serket. Eventually she was absorbed into Isis.

Tasenetnofret - A protective goddess of Kom Ombo whose name means "The Good Sister" or "The Beautiful Sister". She was a local manifestation of the goddess Hathor, consort of Horus, and mother of Panebtawy.

Tatenen - An earth god who personified the primordial mound at creation and symbolized the land of Egypt. He is most likely the same god re-ferred to as Khenty-Tjenenet in the period of the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE). He was worshipped at Memphis during the Middle Kingdom (2040-1782 BCE) and continued to be venerated primarily in that region through the rest of Egypt's history. His association with the primordial mound linked him with Ptah and, through Ptah, with Atum and Ra, the other names for the creator god/sun god. Tatenen was a bisexual god, re-ferred to as "Mother of All the Gods" in one text.

Taweret (Tauret) - A protective goddess in the form of a hippopotamus, the most famous hippopotamus deity from ancient Egypt, associated with both Isis and Hathor. Taweret is a goddess of childbirth and fertility who was very popular throughout Egypt's history. She was invoked regularly for protection of children and help during pregnancy and birth. The ancient Egyptians observed the female hippopotamus to be extremely protective of her children which led to the form of this goddess. The male hippo-potamus was very aggressive and considered one of the most dangerous animals in Egypt so he was associated with the god Set resulting in images of Taweret as consort of Set even though the two deities had nothing in common. Taweret is closely associated with Hathor and called "Follower of Horus" both of which distance her from Set. She is further identified as the consort of Bes, the dwarf god of childbirth, sexuality, humor, and war. Like Bes, Taweret was featured on household items such as furniture, cosmetic cases, pots, spoons and in fertility images in the home.

Tayet (Tait) - Goddess of weaving who provided the clothes for the king. She was worshipped from the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE) where she was represented as guarding the king's head, protecting him after death, gathering up his bones, and assuring him welcome by the other gods in the afterlife. She later became associated with embalming and was said to weave the cloth for the embalming tents and, later, the bandages used for wrapping the mummy which were known as "wrappings from the hands of Tayet" which associated her with Nephthys.

Tefnut - Goddess of moisture, sister of Shu, daughter of Atum (Ra)

at the creation of the world. Shu and Tefnut were the first two gods

created either by mating with his shadow or by spitting. R. H. Wilkinson notes that her name represents the sound of spitting and she was often represented “by a pair of lips, spitting, in late texts” (183). She is goddess of the atmosphere of the lower world, the earth, just as Shu is god of the upper atmosphere above the earth. Tefnut is the mother of Geb (earth) and Nut (sky) who were born so human beings could have somewhere to live. She is most often depicted as a woman seated with a lion’s head or a serpent with a lion’s head.

Tenenit (Tenenet or Tjenenet) - Goddess of beer, brewing and childbirth. Her name comes from “tenemu” which means “beer”. She was the consort of the god Montu and associated with Meskhenet as a goddess of royal births. She is the patron goddess of brewers.

Tetrads - Representations of completeness corresponding sometimes to the four cardinal points of the compass and best represented by the Four Sons of Horus. Balance was an important concept to the ancient Egyptians and the numbers two, four, and eight figure significantly in representations of the deities (as do three, six, and nine). Every male god has a female counterpart or a feminine aspect, the four goddesses Isis, Neith, Nephthys, and Serket watch over the Four Sons of Horus, and the Ogdoad was the grouping of the eight gods of creative substances.

Thoth - God of writing and wisdom, truth and integrity, one of the most important deities in the Egyptian pantheon worshipped from the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) on to the Ptolemaic Dynasty (323-30 BCE), the last to rule Egypt. He was probably originally a lunar god, son of Atum (Ra) but later texts represent him as the son of Horus. Thoth is depicted in some texts as a baboon but mostly as a man with the head of an ibis holding a writing implement. He is credited with inventing writing and was the record-keeper of the gods. He was known as “Lord of Time” and “Reckoner of Years” because he marked the passage of time and, through the powerful magic of his divine knowledge of words, gave the king a long reign so he could maintain order on earth. He was the patron god of libraries and of scribes. In every story told of him, Thoth is the divine friend and benefactor of humanity who gave people understanding through the gift of the written word. He appears in one story as gambling for the five days required for Nut to give birth to the First Five Gods and in others as mediating between the gods and delivering messages. In the afterlife he stands with Osiris and keeps records in the Hall of Truth at the ritual of the Weighing of the Heart. His consort was Seshat, his daughter or his wife, who was his female counterpart and also patron deity of libraries and books.

Tjenenyet - A protective goddess from the 12th Dynasty (1991-1802 BCE) who was most likely worshipped earlier. She was consort of the god Montu and was primarily worshipped at Hermonthis (Armant) near Thebes.

Tree Goddesses - A number of well-known Egyptian goddesses were associated with trees, most notably Isis, Hathor, and Nut. Male gods were sometimes linked to a certain tree but it seems only in specific myths or imagery. Hathor was famously associated with the sycamore tree and known as “Lady of the Sycamore” but Isis was also linked to this tree. The practice of burying a body in a wooden casket was thought to be a return of the deceased to the womb of the Mother Goddess.

Triads - Important groupings of three deities, usually a father-god, mother-god, and child-god, the two best known being the Theban Tri-ad of Amun, Mut, and Khons and the Abydos Triad of Osiris, Isis, and Horus. There are examples of other triads, however, which did not follow this pattern such as the Amun-Ra-Ptah Triad where all three gods represented the same celestial power (the sun). Triads are also seen in depictions of the afterlife where ram, lion, and jackal-headed gods are grouped together.

Tutu - A protective god known as “He Who Keeps Enemies at a Distance”, worshipped during the latter part of Egypt’s history. He ward off demons and black magic and was depicted as a striding lion with the head of a man, large wings, and a snake for a tail.

U

Uat-Ur - The personification of the Mediterranean Sea. See Wadj-Wer.

Uajyt (Wadjet or Uto) - Associated with Nekhbet, a protective goddess of Lower Egypt. She is depicted as a serpent with a woman’s head. She is an aspect of Wadjet, sister of Nekhbet, in later images from Lower Egypt.

Unut (Wenet or Wenut) - A protective goddess worshipped at Hermopolis and known as “The Swift One”. She was depicted as a woman with a rabbit’s head or a serpent with a rabbit’s head and is often referred to as “the rabbit goddess”. She was associated with the god Wenenu, depicted as a man with a rabbit’s head, who was an aspect of Osiris or sometimes Ra. She is known primarily from amulets showing her image.

W

Wadjet - A great protective goddess and patroness of Lower Egypt, one of the oldest deities in the Egyptian pantheon, represented as the rearing cobra which became the king's insignia (the uraeus). She was also referred to as Uajyt in her aggressive form and was the counterbalance to the more motherly Nekhbet, her sister. Wadjet was worshipped as an important goddess in the Predynastic Period (c. 6000-3150 BCE) and by the Early Dynastic Period (c. 3150-2613 BCE) was the supreme deity of Lower Egypt represented frequently with Nekhbet who symbolized Upper Egypt. She was the daughter of Ra and one of the goddesses featured in stories about the Eye of Ra. At the dawn of creation she was sent forth by Ra as his eye to find Shu and Tefnut when they had gone off to create the world. She planted the first papyrus plants, laid out the papyrus fields in the swamps of the Nile Delta, and helped Isis raise Horus there when they were hiding from Set. Among her titles is Weret-Hekau, meaning "Great of Magic" and she was regularly invoked for protection against demons, bad luck, or ghosts.

Wadj-Wer (Uat-Ur) - The personification of the Mediterranean Sea whose name means "The Great Green". Recent scholarship has changed the traditional view of this god and he is now believed to have personified the lakes, swamps, and lagoons of the Delta region near to the Mediterranean. Wilkinson notes inscriptions which reference "crossing the great green" by foot which would indicate a land-crossing through the Delta region instead of the sea. He was worshipped as early as the Old Kingdom (c. 2613-2181 BCE) and continues to be referenced through the rest of Egypt's history, especially through protective amulets and tomb inscriptions.

Waset (Wosret) - A protective goddess of the city of Thebes whose name means "The Powerful Female One". She was the personification of the city which was also known as 'Waset'. She was originally an aspect of Hathor but emerged with her own distinct character and iconography by the time of the Middle Kingdom (c. 2040-1782 BCE). She is depicted as a woman holding the Was sceptre and ankh and a staff adorned with ribbons but is also shown with a bow and arrows and an axe representing the military might of Thebes.

Weneg - A protective god first referenced in the Old Kingdom period (c. 2613-2181 BCE) who held up the sky and maintained order between the heavens and the earth. He is closely associated with ma'at the concept and Ma'at the goddess who personified harmony in that he served as a just mediator between the gods in their disputes.

Wenenu - A protective god, aspect of Osiris or sometimes Ra, consort of Unut. He is depicted as a rabbit-headed man.

Wepset - A protective goddess whose name means "She Who Burns" who destroys the enemies of Osiris. She is usually represented as a serpent but later as a woman wearing the uraeus with horns and the sun disk overhead. She features in stories concerning the Eye of Ra and is one of the personifications of the Distant Goddess motif where the Eye of Ra departs from the god and is returned, or returns itself, bringing transformation.

Wepwawet (Wepiu or Wepuaut) - One of the most ancient gods of Egypt and the oldest depiction of a jackal god, pre-dating Anubis, with whom he is often confused. His name means "Opener of the Ways" and this has been interpreted as opening the way for king in battle, opening the way to the afterlife, and opening the way at one's birth. He is depicted on the Narmer Palette (c. 3150 BCE) and associated with Wadjet. He eventually became closely associated with Horus and, as Wepwawet-Ra, with the sun god Ra. He is depicted as a jackal, sometimes wearing a scarf with a falcon before him.

Werethekau (Weret-Hekau) - An important protective goddess or, more often, an epithet applied to other female deities such as Isis. The name means "Great of Magic" and is associated with the uraeus and the crown of Lower Egypt. Wadjet is known as Weret-Hekau, as is Isis, but the name seems to have also designated a specific goddess of protection depicted as a rearing serpent although this could simply be Wadjet in her aggressive form.

Y

Yah - See Iah.

Yam - The Phoenician god of the sea who battled the Lord Baal for control of the world. He entered the Egyptian pantheon through trade and made his way into Egyptian mythology through stories of his battles with Set. He was the personification of the raging sea and greatly feared. No temples were ever raised to him but he is referenced in some manuscripts which indicate he was a concern to seafarers who may have worn amulets with his image for protection.

Z

Zenenet - Another name for Isis in the city of Hermonthis (modern-day Armant) near Thebes.

Women Leaders in African History: Idia, First Queen Mother of Benin

The kingdom of Benin

The kingdom of Benin (in present-day Nigeria) was plunged into a state of turmoil at the end of the fifteenth century when the Oba (king) Ozolua died and left two powerful sons to dispute succession. His son Esigie controlled Benin City, while another son, Arhuanran, was based in the equally important city of Udo about twenty miles away. The ensuing civil war severely compromised Benin's status as a regional power and undermined Benin City's place at the political and cultural center of the kingdom. Exploiting this weakness, the neighboring Igala peoples sent warriors across the Benue River to wrest control of Benin's northern territories. Esigie ultimately defeated his brother and conquered the Igala, reestablishing the unity and military strength of the kingdom. His mother Idia received much of the credit for these victories as her political counsel, together with her mystical powers and medicinal knowledge, were viewed as critical elements of Esigie's success on the battlefield. To reward and honor her, Esigie created a new position within the court called the iyoba, or queen mother, which gave her significant political privileges, including a separate residence with its own staff.

As mother of the king, Idia and later iyobas wielded considerable power. Until recent times, the queen mother, who bore the Oba's first son, had no other children and devoted her life to raising the future ruler of the kingdom, a role she was destined to play even before her own birth. Queen mothers were therefore viewed as instrumental to the protection and well-being of the oba and, by extension, the kingdom. Indeed, obas wore carved ivory pendant masks representing the iyoba during ceremonies designed to rid the kingdom of malevolent spiritual forces. An especially fine example of such masks in the Metropolitan Museum's collection dates from the sixteenth century and is believed to depict Idia herself. Two vertical bars of inlaid iron between the eyes allude to medicine-filled incisions that were one source of Idia's metaphysical power. Within the court, the queen mother's political status was equal to that of a senior chief, and she enjoyed the right to commission precious works of art for personal and devotional use. Images of the iyoba found on the cast brass objects with which she was associated, such as ikegobo (altars to the hand) and urhoto (rectangular altarpieces) portray her in a shirt of coral beads flanked by attendants bearing symbols of political and spiritual power. These attendants, also depicted in carved ivory, were women under the tutelage of the iyoba destined for marriage to her son, the future oba. As with ancestral obas, deceased iyobas were venerated with cast-brass memorial heads fitted with carved ivory tusks and displayed on royal altars.

The Seven Hermetic Principles

The 7 Hermetic Principles

1. The Principle of Mentalism

The All is mind; the Universe is mental.

2. The Principle of Correspondence

3. The Principle of Vibration

Nothing rests; everything moves; everything vibrates.

4. The Principle of Polarity

Everything is dual; everything has poles; everything has its pair of opposites.

5. The Principle of Rhythm

The pendulum-swing manifests in everything; the measure of the swing to the right is the measure of the swing to the left; rhythm compensates.

6. The Principle of Cause & Effect

Every Cause has its Effect; every Effect has its Cause.

7. The Principle of Gender

Gender is in everything; everything has its Masculine and Feminine Principles; Gender manifests on all planes.
